that the plaintiff had undertaken not only to procure the divorce but also to procure Shengi as the wife for the defendant, as part of the transaction of the loan. I do not think it is open to me to consider, at this stage of the second appeal, and go into this matter, and upset the finding of the lower Appellate Court upon a point of fact. The finding that the transaction of loan was complete with the payment of the consideration and that nothing was left to be done on plaintiff's part to complete it is a finding of fact which is binding on me as a second Appellate Court. However erroneous or grossly improper that finding may be it is unassailable in second appeal provided it is supported by evidence proper for consideration. The lower Appellate Court has preferred to accept the testimony of the plaintiff on this point, and has held that the transaction of divorce was arranged for by the defendant through his brother and that there is no satisfactory proof on record to prove that plaintiff took any part in procuring the divorce except that of making payment to Pandhari on defendant's behalf. It was open to the lower Appellate Court to come to any reasonable finding one way or the other on the question of fact before it, namely, whether the transaction of loan and the transaction of divorce were parts of the same transaction or formed independent transactions, and whether the agreement to advance the loan was only collateral to the main agreement for divorce between the defendant and Pandhari. The Court thought fit to accept the view that they are separate transactions and that one has nothing to do with the other. The plaintiff's admission that he had accompanied the defendant and his brother and paid the amount on defendant's behalf does not advance the latter's case any further or fix the former with responsibility for failure of any contractual obligation. His presence at the most fixes him with knowledge of the fact that the money was required for the purpose of obtaining a Farkat as recited in the promissory note and that it was utilized for it. It has not been attempted to show that plaintiff's undertaking extends so far as even to get Shengi to marry defendant. The plaintiff may have expressed his willingness to use his best endeavours to help the defendant in getting himself married to Shengi but that does not amount to a promise on his part to procure or bring about the marriage, failure to do which would liberate the defendant from the obligation to repay to the plaintiff the debt fully incurred from him. I do not, therefore, see any grounds for interfering with the finding of fact sought to be challenged in second appeal.

The only legal question which remains to be considered, therefore, is whether a creditor, who knows that the object of his debtor in taking the loan advanced by him is to utilize the money for payment of compensation to a husband, who is willing to divorce his wife, in case his marriage expenses are paid back to him, is disentitled from recovering it by suit from his debtor. The lower Appellate Court, having considered the case from the right point of view, has held, after a careful discussion of the law bearing on the point, that the mere fact that the creditor is aware of the purpose, is no ground for holding that the contract of loan is tainted with immorality, however immoral the procuring of the divorce may be, as I put it, or even though payment of money for procuring the divorce between the wife and the husband was immoral, as the Additional District Judge puts it.

The respondent's pleader contends before me that the lower Appellate Court, was wrong in its assumption that repayment of marriage expenses to a willing husband, for passing a divorce deed, was immoral and opposed to public policy, and that the right view to take was that such payment has not been proved, to be illegal or unlawful or opposed to public policy, by the defendant on whom the burden of proof lay to establish the illegality of the consideration.

The suit is based upon a promissory note. Under the Negotiable Instruments Act there is a presumption that every promissory note is for consideration. All consideration is lawful unless it is forbidden by law, or is of such a nature that if permitted it would defeat the provisions of any law, or is fraudulent, or involves or implies injury to the person or property of another, or the Court regards it as immoral or opposed to public policy. Section 23 of the Contract Act declares the consideration in each of these cases to be unlawful, and enacts that every agreement of which the consideration is unlawful is void. It would thus be quite apparent to any body who reads it, that the very wording of section 23 of the Act shows that there is a presumption of lawfulness of every consideration. The law presumes against illegality and the burden of establishing illegality as a fact is, therefore, on the person, who asserts it. The Hire Purchase Furnishing Company v. Richens (1) Mills v. Dunham (2). Waugh v. Morris (3).

The defendant must, therefore, establish every fact necessary to prove the illegality of the transaction. He undertook to do this by trying to establish a sort of connection between the transaction of the loan and the transaction of divorce, and by urging that plaintiff was responsible for bringing about the divorce as also for arranging for his marriage. This inter-connection between the two transactions has not, however, been established by him as the lower Appellate Court's findings show. He has succeeded in proving that plaintiff had knowledge of only the purpose of the borrowing, but not that plaintiff had given any undertaking to procure or bring about the divorce and the subsequent marriage. The question is, is this sufficient to discharge the onus, or was it necessary for the defendant to have established further that the payment of compensation to the husband willing to pass a Farkat divorcing his wife was itself unlawful or immoral or opposed to public policy? In other words, was it necessary for the defendant to establish that such payment whether made to the knowledge of the creditor or not tainted the loan with immorality or illegality or made it one opposed to public policy. I think when the defendant undertook the burden of proving the illegality of the consideration, he undertook the whole burden and he was bound to prove illegality in every detail of that transaction. He had, therefore, to allege and prove that under law, which would mean both statutory as well as customary law, the repayment of marriage expenses to a husband who is willing to divorce his wife, is illegal He has not alleged it, much less has he proved it.

Roy's Tagore Law Lectures, 1908 on Customs and Customary Law in British India, page 310 contains the following observations:—

> "Divorce is not contemplated by the Hindu Law, but it is not repugnant to the principles, and if there be a well-established custom in its support it may override the general provisions of that law. Sir William Strange in his treatise on Hindu Law (Vol. I, page 52 of the 4th edition) says that in the lowest classes a divorce is attainable between a husband and wife provided it is allowed by the custom of the caste."

In the case of Mt. Kudomee Dassee v. Joteeram Kolita (4), the Munsiff had found that there was a custom for men and women to assent to divorce by deed, but the District Judge held that even if the custom were established it would not affect the Hindu Law. As he was wrong in holding such a view the High Court remanded the case to him for his finding on the custom which the Munsiff said was established.

In Sankaralingam Chetti v. Subban Chetti(5), it was held that there is nothing immoral in a caste custom by which divorce and remarriage are permissible on mutual agreement on one party paying to the other the expenses of the latter's original marriage (parisan). The ruling cited (Uji v. Hathi Lalu (6), in that case was distinguished on the ground) that in that case the question of the authority of the caste to sanction a woman's remarriage without divorce i. e., without a proceeding to which both husband and wife were parties, was decided, while in the Madras case the question was one of divorce by mutual consent of the husband and wife. The case in (Keshav Hargovan v. Bai Gandi (7)), is similarly distinguishable. It involved the question whether the husband be willing or not. I again quote the following from Roy's Customs and Customary Law in British India:—

> "Amongst the lower classes of people —whether in Bengal, Bombay, United Provinces of Agra and Oudh or in Southern India divorce is allowed by caste people. . . . The divorce is usually effected by mutual consent, on the payment of some compensation for marriage expenses incurred at the first marriage

"In some tracts, the custom of reimbursing the late husband's relations for the expenses of a woman's first marriage is so well-known that no marriage of a widow can be celebrated until such expenses have been paid. Such a custom is so notorious that it has become, as it were a part of the marriage contract in cases in which members of a community elect to marry widows. Madda v. Sheo Baksh (8)." The defendant was thus bound to establish that in this case there was no custom to reimburse or compensate the husband with the expenses of his marriage upon his assenting to divorce his wife, in order to prove that such payment was unlawful or immoral or opposed to public policy. It was not for the plaintiff to establish a positive custom, as the lower Appellate Court thinks, but it was the defendant's duty to establish the absence of such a custom if he desired the Court to regard the consideration as immoral or opposed to public policy and, therefore, unlawful.

Ismay. J. C., in Local Government v. Pilaji (9), makes the following observations—at pages 70 and 71 which are pertinent to the point involved in this appeal :—

"In considering the question whether the object of an agreement is unlawful as being opposed to public policy it is impossible to shut one's eyes to the danger of reasoning from borrowed analogies and of allowing undue weight to considerations which are sentimental rather than real. It is no doubt very difficult to specify exactly what is contrary to public policy. In Richardson v. Mellish (10), Mr. Justice Burrough said :—"Public policy is a very unruly horse and when once you get astride it you never know where it will carry you. It may lead you from the sound law. It is never argued at all but when other points fail'."

In this case the defendant has pleaded that the agreement is against public policy but has given no evidence to show how it is so and still expects the Courts to give a verdict in his favour. The observations of Lord Bramwell in Mogul Steamship Company v. Mc. Gregor, Grow & Co. (11), very fittingly apply here and I, therefore, quote them below :—

"No evidence is given in these public policy cases. The tribunal is to say, as matter of law, that the thing is against public policy and void. How can the Judge do that without any evidence as to its effect and consequences?"

In the absence of any evidence to prove the plea of the defendant that the consideration or object of the agreement in question was immoral or against public policy and, therefore, unlawful, I hold that the mere fact that a creditor is aware that the object of his debtor in borrowing the loan from him, is to pay compensation to the husband who was willing to forego his claim on his wife and pass a Farkat evidencing such a transaction, does not necessarily entitle the Court to regard the consideration paid under such an agreement as immoral or opposed to public policy, and that as in this case the illegality has not been established by the defendant I further hold that the consideration or object of the agreement in suit was not unlawful, and that the present suit was maintainable.

In this view of the case the decree appealed against is correct and the same is upheld. The result is that this appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

LAL UMRAO SINGH v. LAL SINGH

CIVIL REVISION NO. 110 OF 1923.

June 30, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Walsh, Acting Chief Justice, and Mr. Justice Boys.

LAL UMRAO SINGH—JUDGMENT-DEBTOR—APPLICANT
LAL SINGH—DECREE-HOLDER AND CHITTU MAL—PURCHASER—OPPOSITE PARTY.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI. r. 46, 89—Simple hypothecation bond—Attachment—Sale—"Moveable property"—"Immoveable property"—Setting aside of sale—General Clauses Act (X of 1897), s. 3 (25)—"Benefits to arise out of land"—Security under simple mortgage.

A simple hypothecation bond is "moveable property" not only for the purposes of attachment but also for the purposes of sale and O. XXI, r. 89 has no application. In other words, the bond is "moveable property" for all three purposes, attachment, sale and setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 89. [p. 891, col. 2.]

A simple mortgage bond carries with it two rights; a right to a decree for money and to a decree for sale. The latter gives the mortgagee a right to be recouped from the sale proceeds but gives absolutely no right of any sort to or in the land. He has not even a right to all the sale proceeds but to only so much as may be necessary to meet his debt. In other words, a debt due on a simple motgage is a debt though it is secured on land; the security is merely collateral. In short, a simple hypothecation bond does not create "an interest in immoveable property." [p. 891, col 2.]

In the absence of a clear intention to the contrary, what is held to be 'moveable property' at the time of the attachment may reasonably be considered to continue to be 'moveable' at the time of the sale. Even assuming that a simple hypothecation bond creates an interest in 'immoveable property' and as such is 'immoveable property' itself, there is a clear indication of the intention of the Legislature that for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure it should be treated as 'moveable property.' [p. 892, col. 1.]

In the definition of "immoveable property," in section 3, (25), General Clauses Act, the expression "benefits to arise out of land" was never intended to cover such a matter as the security held by the mortgagee under a simple mortgage-bond. [p. 892, col. 1.]

Revision from an order of the Additional District Judge, Aligarh, dated the 28th March 1923.

Mr. K. N. Laghate, for the Applicant.

JUDGMENT.

Boys, J.—Lal Umrao Singh judgment-debtor (the applicant in revision here) held a simple mortgage-bond which was attached and sold by Lal Singh, the first opposite party here, in execution of a decree. On the 23rd of October 1922, the judgment-debtor sent the money by telegraphic money-order but it arrived after the sale. The 24th being a Sunday he deposited the money on the 25th and on the 28th filed an application under r. 89 to get the sale set aside. The decree-holder objected that the simple mortgage-bond not being "immoveable property" the sale could not be set aside. The Munsif disallowed this objection holding that a mortgagee's rights, whether the mortgage was simple or usufructuary, constituted "an interest in immoveable property," that the fact that the property attached was attached as moveable did not render it moveable once for all and that it was immoveable within the meaning of the term in the Transfer of Property Act.

The District Judge on appeal relying on Nataraja Iyer v. The South Indian Bank of Tinnevelly (1) and Karim-un-nissa v. Phul Chand (2) allowed the appeal holding the simple mortgage-bond to be moveable property and held that, that being so, the sale could not be set aside. The judgment-debtor asks us to revise this order.

For the applicant no serious attempt has been made to show that a simple mortgage-bond is not "moveable property" for the purpose of determining the procedure appropriate to attachment and that such procedure is not contained in O. XXI, r. 46 (section 268 of the old Code). That is a position he could hardly take up in face of the provisions of the Code of Civil Procedure and adverse authority. Compare Karim-un-nissa v. Phul Chand (2), Tarvadi Bholanath Harishanker v. Bai Kashi (3), Bantu v. Ganda Singh (4), Nataraja Iyer

v. The South Indian Bank of Tinnevelly (1) Shah Muhammad Yusuf v. Lachmi Narain (5).

Karim-un-nissa v. Phul Chand (2), was referred to in Sheocharan Lal v. Sheo Sewak Singh (6), but not overruled and (Bantu v. Ganda Singh (4) was referred to and distinguished but not overruled in Sewa Ram v. Dheru Shah (7). The applicant, however, contends that while a simple hypothecation bond may be treated as moveable property for the purpose of attachment and the procedure of O. XXI, r. 46 be applicable, it does not follow that it is not "immoveable property" for the purpose of the sale and setting aside of the sale under O. XXI, r. 89 and he has referred to Bhawani Kuar v. Gulab Rai (8), Sheo Charan Lal v. Sheo Sewak Singh (6), Mutsaddai Lal v. Muhammad Hanif (9), Sewa Ram v. Dheru Shah (7), Ram Sarup v. Harpal (10) and Hafizuddin v. Jadu Nath (11).

Of these Bhawani Kuar v. Gulab Rai (8) was shown in Karim-un-nissa v. Phul Chand (2) to be no longer law. Of the others, Sheo Charan Lal v. Sheo Sewak Singh (6), Mutsaddi Lal v. Muhammad Hanif 9), Hafizuddin v. Jadu Nath (11) and Ram Sarup v. Harpal (10) have very little bearing, if any, on the point. But the ruling of Kensington, J. in Sewa Ram v. Dheru Shah (7) does go the whole length of his contention. The learned Judge held and for that as well as for another reason ordered the lower Court to hear the application for setting aside the sale. In support of his view the learned Judge relied only upon Sant Singh v. Jowala Singh (12), in which it was held, in a case dealing with the rights of a Hindu female heir to alienate that a mortgage-debt is immoveable property.

> "It does not follow that because a mortgage debt is to be treated as moveable property for the purpose of attachment under rule 46, it should, therefore, be considered as moveable property in all cases."

The opposite-party, on the other hand, contends that the bond being certainly attached as moveable property must be held to be sold as moveable property. The first part of this contention is, as I have already said, well established and in effect admitted. In support of the conclusion it may be said that in two of the cases quoted Karim-un-nissa v. Phul Chand, (2) and Nataraja Iyer v. South Indian Bank of Tinnevelly (1), language was used which suggests that, in the minds of the learned Judges, what was moveable for the purposes of attachment was moveable for the purposes of sale. A consideration of these authorities and another to which I shall refer and particularly of the nature of a simple hypothecation bond leaves no doubt in my mind that the contention of the opposite party is correct, that the bond is moveable property for all three purposes, attachment, sale and setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 89.

The learned Munsif has held that the bond constitutes an "interest in immoveable property" and is, therefore, "immoveable property" within rule 89. Is the premise correct? A simple mortgage-bond carries with it two rights; a right to a decree for money and to a decree for sale. The latter gives the mortgagee a right to be recouped from the sale proceeds but gives absolutely no right of any sort to or in the land. He has not even a right to all the sale proceeds but to only so much as may be necessary to meet his debt.

In Tarvadi Bholanath Harishankar v. Bai Kashi. (3) Chandavarkar, J. said at page 311 "A simple mortgage creates a right to recover the debt due on it from land; a mortgage with a right of foreclosure creates a right to recover the land itself. Therefore, a debt on a simple mortgage is a debt, though it is secured on land, and the security is merely collateral." What justification is there for holding that a simple hypothecation bond creates "an interest in immoveable property."?

Next we have the consideration clearly stated by Jenkins, C.J. in the case Tarvadi Bhalanath Harishankar v Bai Kashi(3) just referred to and concurred in by Chandavarkar, J., quoting Balde Dhanrup Marvadi v. Ramchandra Balvant (13) that the debt has been sold and that certainly the sale of the debt cannot be set aside, and that the security must go with the debt. It is urged for the applicant that from the mere fact that for the purposes of the procedure for attachment it is convenient to treat the bond as moveable, it does not follow that other considerations as to the attributes of the property to be affected or possibly affected did not determine its nature when the legislature was considering its sale and the consequences to follow from its sale. This may be conceded but there is no evidence to show that this consideration did weigh with the legislature or that effect was given to such considerations. On the other hand, it must be conceded that, in the absence of a clear intention to the contrary, what is held to be moveable property at the time of the attachment may reasonably be considered to continue to be moveable at the time of the sale, and I find myself in agreement with the view, of Chandavarkar J. in Tarvadi Bholanath Harishankar v. Bai Kashi (3), where he further says, that even assuming that " it is an interest in immoveable property and as such is immoveable property itself, we have as I said at the outset a clear indication of the intention of the legislature that for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure it should be treated as moveble property."

Lastly, to hold that it is not immoveable property is consistent with the definition of "immoveable property " to be found in the General Clauses Act, section 3 (25). The expression "benefits to arise out of land " was never intended to cover such a matter as the security held by the mortgagee under a simple mortgage-bond, but such benefits as the right to a ferry.

For these reasons I have no hesitation in holding that a simple hypothecation bond is " moveable property " not only for the purposes of attachment but also for the purposes of sale and O. XXI, r. 89 has no application.

It is not clear that any question affecting the jurisdiction of the District Judge arises in this case, such as would justify this Court in interfering in revision, were we otherwise inclined to do so, but we had heard much argument before this point emerged and we thought it desirable then to hear the argument out as the matter appears not to have been definitely determined by this Court and is one which might arise again at any time. I would dismiss the application.

Walsh, A. C. J.—I have read the judgment of my brother Boys and I agree with it.

By the Court.—The order of the Court is that the application is dismissed with costs on the higher scale, (if any).

MADRAS HIGH COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 257 OF 1923.

March 11, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Justice Krishnan.

CLAN LINE STEAMSHIP COMPANY LIMITED
—DEFENDANT—APPELLANT
versus
R. SRINIVASA PAI (DIED) AND OTHERS
—PLAINTIFFS—RESPONDENTS.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 70—Bill of lading—Carriage of goods from Liverpool to Cochin—Clause exempting ship-owners from liability in case of "restraint of rulers" — Freight paid in advance by shippers — Steamer commandeered by Government at Bombay—Goods forwarded to Cochin by Master of ship—Consignee taking delivery on payment of charges—Suit for refund against ship-owners—Right of Master to act for cargo-owners.

The defendant steamship Company undertook with the plaintiff to carry certain goods from Liverpool to Cochin and received the advance freight therefor in England. There was a provision in the bill of lading for termination of voyage in case of " restraint of rulers", and for non-liability of the Company for any loss or damage thereby. The goods were put on board one of defendant's steamers and duly arrived at Bombay Harbour but there the steamer was commandeered by the Government of India for the use of transport. In consequence all the cargo was discharged in the port and notice given to the consignee. There was some correspondence between the defendant's agents at Bombay and the plaintiff on a dispute at to who should bear the charges for transhipment between Bombay and Cochin. Finally the goods were transhipped by the defendant Company from Bombay to Cochin The plaintiff took delivery of the goods and paid the charges. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant Company for refund of the sum so paid,

Held, that (1) The " restraint of rulers " being one of the excepted causes, the master of the ship was entitled, on the steamer being commandeered, to land the goods at Bombay and the ship-owner's responsibility ceased as soon as notice was given to the shippers, that even though the voyage had not been completed, the company was not bound to refund any portion of the advance freight paid or carry the goods to Cochin at their expense; [p. 894, col 2.]

(2) The " law of the flag " which governed the contract of the bill of lading, meant in this case the English law, at any rate till the contract came to an end by the goods being landed in Bombay. [p. 895, col. 1.]

(3) The defendant Company having intended throughout to hold the consignee responsible for the charges from Bombay to Cochin and never having intended to act gratuitously and the plaintiff never having repudiated the company's action in sending the goods to Cochin, the company could not be held to have acted voluntarily or gratuitously .[p. 894, col. 2.]

(4) In any case, under section 70 of the Contract Act, the defendants, being carriers, were bound to make arrangemants for the disposal of the cargo that, therefore, they must be held to have acted lawfully in sending the goods from Bombay to Cochin and that the plaintiff having enjoyed the benefit was bound to pay the charges. [p. 893, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Court, South Malabar at Calicut, in A. S. No. 319 of 1920, preferred against the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Cochin, in O. S. No. 19 of 1918.

Messrs. R. N. Aiyangar and O. T. Govinda Nambiar, for the Appellant.

Messrs. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer and S. Srinivasa Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In this second appeal the Clan Line Steamship Co., Ltd., is the appellant; the respondents are certain merchants in Cochin who were consignees of certain goods which the defendant Company had undertaken to carry from Liverpool and London to Cochin under bills of lading Exs. 50, 51 and 52. The language of all these bills is exactly similar and it will be sufficient to refer to one of them in considering the case. The total freight to Cochin was paid as advance freight in England and the goods were put on board of one of the defendant Company's steamers, "SS. Clan Mackellar." The ship duly arrived at the Bombay harbour, but when it arrived there it was commandeered by the Government of India for use as transport and in consequence its voyage with cargo had to be terminated and all its cargo was discharged in that port. The steamship agents gave notice of what happened to all the consignees including the plaintiffs by Ex. 24 and asked them to make arrangements to take delivery in Bombay. Some correspondence passed between the parties the effect of which will have to be considered presently. Finally plaintiffs' goods were forwarded to Cochin by the defendant Company's agents in Bombay on Board SS. Upanda, a vessel, belonging to the B. I. S. N. Co. and were taken delivery of by the plaintiffs on payment of the freight and other charges, amounting to Rs. 1,720 and odd, for the carriage of the goods from Bombay to Cochin. Plaintiffs aver that these charges were wrongfully collected from them and that they are not liable for them and they seek in this suit to get a refund of that money with a small sum for damages for short delivery.

The Subordinate Judge who tried the suit dismissed it, but on appeal the District Judge has given the plaintiffs a decree for part of the amount claimed, made up of the freight and incidental charges connected with the transhipment of the goods from Bombay to Cochin, and of the damages claimed. The plaintiffs have not appealed as regards the amount disallowed but the defendant Company has appealed and has contended before me that the suit should have been dismissed.

The main question for decision is whether the defendant Company was entitled to call upon the plaintiffs to pay the charges for the carriage of goods from Bombay to Cochin. There can be no doubt that when Clan Mackellar was commandeered in Bombay its voyage terminated as the result of " restraint of rulers", the words used in paragraph 3 of the bill of lading-Ex. 50, and the ship-owners were not liable for any loss or damage occasioned thereby. The restraint of rulers being one of the excepted causes under paragraph 5, the master of the ship was entitled under that paragraph to land the plaintiff's goods in Bombay at their expense and risk, and the ship-owners' responsibility ceased as soon as notice was given to the shippers by Ex. 24. Though the voyage to Cochin had not been completed the shipowners were not bound to refund any portion of the advance freight paid or to carry the goods to Cochin at their expense. These propositions are laid down in a recent decision of this High Court with reference to this very voyage of ss. Clan Mackellar and the bill of lading there was in the same terms as here. The learned Judges have referred to the English authorities on the points and have discussed the questions at length and as I respectfully follow that ruling it is not necessary for me to discuss these questions again. It was urged that the learned Judges were wrong in applying the English Law to the case and that as soon as Clan Mackellar entered the Indian territorial waters, where the commandeering took place, the Indian Law applied and that section 65 of the Indian Contract Act governed the case. I am unable to accept this argument. The parties have expressly covenanted by the very first clause in the billl of lading that their contract was to be judged by "the law of the flag" and that certainly meant in this case the English Law till the contract came to an end by the goods being landed in Bombay. The further dealings between the parties may be governed by the Indian Law, but it is not necessary to decide it definitely as it makes no difference in the result.

In the case above cited the learned judges dismissed the shipper's claim against the Clan Line Co., for the payment of the charges incurred by them in carrying their goods from Bombay to Mangalore, which was the port of destination in that case. The only difference between that case and this case is that whereas in that case the shippers paid the carrying charges here, the Clan Line Co. paid them and collected them from the shippers on delivery of the goods. I do not think this makes any real difference as to the result. It was, however, argued that as the plaintiffs did not ask the defendant Co., to send their goods from Bombay to Cochin their action in so sending must be treated as one taken by them gratuitously and voluntarily and of their own accord, as a piece of officious interference by them with plaintiffs' goods and, therefore, they were not entitled to be repaid in law the expenses they were put to. This argument was accepted by the District Judge and he directed the money collected for such charges to be refunded. It seems to me that this is an entirely wrong view to take of the case. Within 2 days after the goods were landed in Bombay, the 1st plaintiff wrote Ex. V to the defendants' agents in Cochin and asked when the goods will be transhipped to Cochin. He wrote against Ex. VI to the defendants agents immediately to despatch his goods by country craft as no steamers were then available. The plaintiffs. no doubt, offered to take delivery of the goods in Bombay but it was on condition that the company should pay the difference with the freight and the transhipment and other charges. The defendant Co., never agreed to pay these as they were not bound to, under the law. The plaintiffs were apparently under the impression that if the Company sent the goods themselves they would not have to pay the expenses. They again wrote Ex. AA where they say "as no steamers are available" they will take delivery in Bombay if charges would be paid by the Company. Defendant's agent wrote in reply Ex. D wherein they repudiated their liability to pay any difference in freight and offered to deliver in Bombay only on a guarantee being given freeing them from all claim for charges. In reply to a further letter from the plaintiffs they sent a telegram insisting on the guarantee. Though the plaintiffs wrote Ex. CC on 10th January to say that they would take delivery they did not actually do so. On the 20th a steamer became available to tranship these goods to Cochin and the defendant Company's Bombay agents took advantage of the opportunity and transhipped the goods by s.s. Upada. In the meanwhile they had received instructions from their home office to forward the goods to the port of destination, but at the cost of the consignees from whom the charges were to be collected before delivery, as shown by Ex. 36. It is clear from all this correspondence that the defendants agents never intended to tranship the goods gratuitously but always intended to hold the consignees responsible for the charges. The plaintiff asked the defendants' agents to send the goods to Cochin even by country craft if no steamer was available. Even when they proposed to take delivery in Bombay they did so only because it was thought no steamers were available. See Ex. AA. It seems to me that the correspondence shows that plaintiffs did want their goods to be sent by the defendant's agents to Cochin, whatever dispute their might be as to who should bear the charges. The plaintiff's proposal to take delivery themselves in Bombay was conditional on there being no steamers available. Defendant's agents were, therefore, justified in sending the goods by s. s. Upada when that steamer became available and I agree with the Subordinate Judge that the defendant acted as plaintiffs' agents in doing so. The dispute as to the liability to pay the charges has really nothing to do with the authorisation to send the goods by steamer. That dispute has to be decided not on the ground whether the defendant Company sent the goods voluntarily but on the ground as to who was responsible to pay those charges under the law. Plaintiff's subsequent conduct, after they knew that the goods had been sent on to Cochin, clearly shows that even, if they did not actually authorise such sending they acquiesced in and accepted the defendant's action and ratified it Second plaintiff wrote to the defendants' agents Ex. XI to say that he was entitled to the delivery of the goods and not one Liladhur who was disputing his right and that he would pay the charges on receipt of particulars; the 1st plaintiff wrote Ex. VII the next day to the same effect. Subsequently the plaintiffs took delivery of the goods and paid the charges. They say in their plaint that they paid under protest but that was denied, and on the evidence it does not appear that they made any protest. They did not in any way repudiate defendant's action in bringing the goods to Cochin nor did they insist on delivery in Bombay. If the defendants were bound to pay the expenses for carrying the goods to Cochin under the law, the absence of protest at time of payment may not be material, but it is very material in considering whether the parties treated the defendants' action in carrying the goods as a voluntary and gratuitous one.

It seems to me further that even if the defendant Company had no authority to send the goods for the plaintiffs to Cochin and that plaintiffs' subsequent action did not amount to a ratification, defendant Company will still be entitled to claim compensation under section 70 of the Contract Act. No doubt as stated in Damodara Mudaliar v. Secretary of State for India (1) quoted by the District Judge and approved of in Jarao Kumari v. Basantakumar Roy (2) "the section should not be so read as to justify the officious interference of one man with the affairs or property of another.' But this is not a case of that sort at all. The defendant Co. were carriers for the plaintiffs and but for the unforeseen action of the Government of India, they would have carried the goods to Cochin. In such cases the master has power and ought to act for the cargo owners and make such arrangements with regard to the cargo as prudence dictates. See Carver, 6th Edition, P. 421. It is true he ought to obtain instructions from the cargo owners if it is practicable to do so; but in this case the instructions were, if anything, in favour of sending the goods. Even if he fails to obtain instructions his action cannot be treated as unlawful nor was it so treated by the plaintiffs themselves. Nor can the defendant Co. be looked upon as mere officious interferers in sending the goods. It seems to me they acted lawfully and as they clearly did not intend to act gratuitously in the matter and as plaintiffs have enjoyed the benefit they are bound to pay the charges claimed as compensation.

In any view the plaintiffs are not entitled to the refund claimed. No separate argument has been adduced before me regarding the claim for damages for short delivery. That is a claim that should have been made against the B. I. S. N. Co., and not against the defendant Co. in the view I take. The second appeal is, therefore, allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court is set aside and the decree of the first Court restored with costs here and in the Court below.

Easements Act (V of 1882) ss. 5, 13 (f)—Continuous easement—Easement to flow rain water and bath room water—Interpretation of Statutes—Illustrations to sections.

The right of flowing rain water through a masonry drain is a continuous easement within the meaning of section 5 of the Easements Act and therefore, falls under section 13 (f). But the right of flowing the bath room or latrine water through a masonry drain is a discontinuous easement within the meaning of section 5, and, therefore, does not fall under section 13 (f) of the Act. [p. 897, col. 1]

Where the meaning of a section of a Statute is doubtful a reference to an illustration of the section is justified. But if there is a conflict between the section and its illustration, the illustration must give way to the section. [p. 897, col 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the Judge, Small Cause Court, exercising the powers of a Subordinate Judge, Allahabad, dated the 6th March 1922.

FACTS appear from the following Orders of Remand :—

ORDER.—The respondents were the plaintiffs in the Court of first instance. They brought the suit out of which this appeal has arisen for the establishment of a certain right of easement of flowing rain water and water from a bathroom. The plaint did not specifically allege on what ground the suit was based but evidence was led to show that the parties who come from the same stock, separated 40 years age and a partition took place at that date. The suit was, therefore, really based on a right acquired by prescription. But the Court of first instance found that the partition took place within 10 or 12 years of the suit and no case could be based on right acquired by prescription. The plaintiffs then claimed to succeed on the ground that the easement was an apparent, continuous and necessary one for the enjoyment of the share as it was enjoyed at the time of partition. The Court of first instance thought that this point though raised at the time of the arguments, could be disposed of without any fresh evidence on the point and allowed the claim to succeed. But it directed the parties to pay their own costs on the ground that the basis of the claim had been changed. An appeal was taken by the present appellants to the lower Appellate Court and the first ground taken was that the plaintiffs should not have been allowed to change their case. The same point has been raised before this Court.

The learned Counsel for the respondents has argued that nowhere the record shows that the appellant asked for an opportunity to adduce fresh and additional evidence. But I think what I have already stated above, goes to show that the appellant never agreed that the case should be decided on the material on the record.

Looking to clause (f), section 13 of the Easements Act, I find that the point whether a right of easement exists or not, has to be decided on several points of fact to be clearly found.

I do not propose to dismiss the suit on the ground that the point urged was urged late in the Court of first instance. If the Court of first instance had framed a fresh issue at once and given the parties an opportunity to adduce fresh evidence, I think it would have done an act of justice. An award of costs would have compensated the other party. A second suit by the plaintiff would very likely be barred under the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code.

I, therefore, remand the following issue to the lower Appellate Court :—

> "Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any right of easement to flow water under the provisions of clause (f), section 13 of the Easements Act ?"

The parties will be allowed to adduce fresh evidence. The finding and evidence will be submitted to this Court within two months 10 days will be allowed to file objections.

JUDGMENT.—An issue was remanded by this Court in the following language under the provisions of O. XLI, r. 25, Civil Procedure Code :

" Whether the plaintiffs are entitled to any right of easement to flow water under the provisions of cl. (f), section 13 of the Easements Act ?"

The facts of the case are stated in my judgment ordering the remand and need not be recapitulated. The learned Subordinate Judge has answered the issue in the affirmative and exception has been taken to this finding.

It will be remembered that the case, as at first instituted, was based on acquisition of the right of easement by prescription. This case was changed, later on, and the right of easement was claimed under the provisions of section 13, cl. (f) of the Easements Act. So the definite question, which I have to answer before me is, " whether under the said provisions the plaintiffs are entitled to the easement ?" This easement involves the flow of water through a permanent drain. The water is of two kinds, namely, rain water and sullage water coming out of a latrine. The plan on the record will show that water from the courtyard of the plaintiffs and water from the latrine join and then flow into the drain which passes through the defendant No. 1's house. The drain through which the water flows is a masonry drain and is therefore an apparent one within the meaning of section 5 of the Easements Act. The drain is continuous easement in so far as the flow of rain water is concerned. For the flow of rain water no act of man is needed. But so far as the flow of water from the latrine goes, it requires the act of man and to that extent the easement to flow such water is not a continuous easement. It would, therefore, follow that the plaintiffs have no right to flow of latrine water on foot of the provisions of cl. (f), section 13 of the Easements Act.

The learned Subordinate Judge who heard the Appeal first and the learned Judge who decided the remanded issue, both quoted the case Bishambhar Nath v. Jagan Nath Prasad (1). In that case a part of the house had been sold and the question arose as to flow of water. The learned Judges of this Court held that the drain was necessary for the enjoyment of a house. Evidently they were dealing with cl. (e) of section 13 and not with cl. (f). There is no discussion on the point to be found in the judgment as reported and I cannot take the case as an authority on the question now before me.

Reference has been made to illustration (h), section 13. There it is stated that the owner of the transferred house is entitled to the benefit of all the gutters and drains common to the two houses. If we accept the wide language used in the illustration we really vary the rule of law enacted in the main section itself. Only such easements are allowed under cl. (f) as are continuous. If the easements be not continuous within the meaning of cl. (f). it is difficult to see how the benefit of all the gutters and drains mentioned in clause (h) of the illustration can be enjoyed in respect of matters which require an act of man for enjoyment. I am therefore of opinion that illustration (h) cannot be accepted to modify the law itself. If the meaning of the enactment itself were doubtful, a reference to the illustration in order to clear the meaning, would have been justified. But, if there be any conflict between the illustration and the main enactment, the illustration must give way to the latter.

I hold that the plaintiffs have established their right to easement for the flow of rain water alone and not to the flow of any latrine water from their house.

I need not repeat that the present case has not been fought on the ground that the easement was a necessary one and no evidence on that point was led by the parties. There is however a statement of opinion in the appellate judgment which would go to show that it is possible for the plaintiffs to open a drain to carry off the latrine water, though the process may involve some trouble and expense. But as I have said, this is a question which was not raised in any of the Courts below and has not been raised before me.

The result is that the appeal is partly allowed. The plaintiffs respondents' right to easement is hereby restricted only to the flow of rain water. Having regard to the partial success of the parties I order that they will bear their own costs throughout.

JUDGMENT.

Mukerji, J.—This appeal arises out of a suit in ejectment wherein the plaintiffs were unsuccessful in the Court of first instance in getting a decree of khas possession against the defendant, and only succeeded in getting a decree for rent for three years at a certain rate. This decree was set aside on appeal by the plaintiffs, the learned Subordinate Judge having allowed the plaintiff's claim in full and given them khas possession by eviction of the defendants. The defendants are the appellants in this Court.

The question which arises for consideration in the present appeal is what are the respective status of the plaintiffs and the defendants in this case, with regard to a question of this description, decided cases afford us very little assistance. There are certain principles which are applicable to such cases and they are well settled. In a case where the origin of the tenancy is unknown or where the document creating the tenancy is equivocal or ambiguous in its terms, one has got to take into consideration the attendant circumstances, and evidence as to the mode of enjoyment of the tenancy is also admissible and may be considered in order to arrive at a proper conclusion. Another principle is that a tenancy created for a particular purpose may subsequently by conduct of parties be converted into a tenancy of a different character. Now, in the present case, it is true that the tenancy of Nimai Babu, who was the predecessor of the present plaintiffs, was an occupancy holding: and it is also true that no presumption arises from the area of the holding so as to show that it was anything but an occupancy holding in its inception. Originally therefore, it was an occupancy holding and it retained that character until it was purchased by the original plaintiff Madhab Das in the name of his mother-in-law. Then Madhab Das obtained a settlement from the landlord by a confirmatory lease, dated the 28th Katick 1275 B. S. It is necessary to investigate if the tenancy underwent any change in its character when it came into the hands of Madhab Das. It will appear from the recitals in the aforesaid document that at the time when it was executed the lands were in the possession of the original plaintiff Madhab Das through tenants and the landlord settled the same with Madhab Das at a yearly rental of Rs. 16 fixed in perpetuity. The predecessor of some of the defendants was already on the land at the date of this Potta. In the Potta the occupation of Madhab Das was described as money-lending. It gave Madhab Das the right to hold the lands either by cultivating them himself or by others. Since then at any rate, the defendants or their predecessor have been in possession of the lands by acutal cultivation for a period of nearly 50 years, while Madhab Das never had the lands in his khas possession and to continue to be in possession merely by receipt of rent. So far as the plaintiffs are concerned therefore they never treated, their interest in the tenancy as anything else than that of a tenure holder.

Then again as for the defendants, there is no document creating their tenancy. The origin of their tenancy, therefore, is unknown ; that their predecessor was in possession of the lands by actual cultivation was recognised by Madhav Das in the potta referred to above, and they have been, as I have said above, actually cultivating the lands for a period of nearly 50 years.

Under the circumstances it would be wrong, in my opinion, to hold that the plaintiffs ever treated the tenancy belonging to them as otherwise than that of a tenure-holder and the rights of the defendants otherwise than those of occupancy ryots. In my judgment, the defendants are occupancy ryots in this holding and, therefore, they are not liable to eviction. The decree passed by the learned Subordinate Judge should in my opinion, be set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored with costs in this Court and in the Court of appeal below.

When the above judgment was being delivered learned Vakil for the appellants drew my attention to the fact that defendants' predecessor was first inducted into the lands by Madhab Das. This is not inconsistent with anything that has been said above and does not, in my opinion, alter the aspect of the case.

Walmsley, J.—I agree.

[p. 900. col. 2]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Azamgarh, dated the 25th October, 1922.

Mr. Mukhtar Ahmad, for the Appellant.

Dr. N. C. Vaish, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Though the value of this appeal is only Rs. 3, it involves a question of principle of some importance. The suit was one for ejectment in the Revenue Court under section 58 read with section 34 of the Agra Tenancy Act. Section 34 was not specifically pleaded, but the suit was clearly brought in reliance on that section as no specific contract of tenancy between the parties was either alleged in the plaint or proved. The real question in dispute is whether the land is or is not the plaintiff's sir. If it is his sir, he is entitled to treat the defendant as his tenant and to eject him under section 34, the defendant having occupied the land without the plaintiff's consent. The plaintiff's father Lohari Singh was one of four brothers who were proprietors and joint sir holders of a sir khata. The three brothers other than Lohari Singh sold their rights to the defendant. The three brothers there by obtained exproprietary rights in a proportionate portion of the holding under section 10 of the Tenancy Act, and proceedings were duly taken under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act to demarcate the area in which these rights arose. The remaining portion of the holding continued to be sir under the definition contained in section 4 (12) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. Under the first proviso to the section so much of the holding as became the subject of exproprietary tenancy ceased to be sir, but the portion of the holding in which no such rights arose clearly continued to be sir under the definition. The plot in dispute, No. 876, was a portion of the area which continued to be sir. The question is whether it became a joint sir of the purchaser and of the plaintiff's father, or whether the sir rights vested exclusively in the plaintiff's father whose share was not sold. So far as the proprietary right is concerned, the purchaser became jointly entitled to it, as the holding was undivided. This is not disputed. But sir rights, though they can only be held by a proprietor, are something beyond and apart from the mere proprietary right. The right of a sir-holder is a right to exclusive possession coupled with the fact that no person cultivating under him can acquire occupancy rights. In a joint undivided village each proprietor may have his own separate sir although the proprietary rights in the whole village are joint.

The plot in suit has been recorded from the time of sale as the sir of the plaintiff's father and after him of the plaintiff. On this ground the Assistant Collector who tried the case held that the land continued to be the plaintiff's sir and that the defendant, who obtained possession of it without the plaintiff's consent, was liable to ejectment. The officiating District Judge, on the other hand, held that as the defendant is a co-sharer in a proprietary right, the land must be treated as his khudkasht, and the suit for ejectment must fail. It appears to me that the learned District Judge has not sufficiently considered the question whether the land retained the character of sir. It has generally been held (there are numerous decisions of the Board of Revenue to this effect) that sir rights cannot be transferred by purchase. Where the entire sir has been sold and the purchaser obtained actual cultivatory possession, the land is treated as his khudkasht and not as his sir. In the present case the defendant in his written statement does not claim to be a sir-holder. His claim in para. 4 of the statement is that the land is his khudkasht.

It appears to me, therefore, that the decree of the Assistant Collector was correct and should be restored. Lohari Singh's brothers lost their sir rights by the sale to the defendant and obtained instead an exproprietary right in a proportionate share of the holding. Lohari Singh never sold his interest and, therefore, never lost his sir rights in that portion of the holding which was not separated off by proceedings under section 36 of the Land Revenue Act. He is, therefore, entitled to treat the defendant as his tenant under section 34 and to get a decree for his ejectment. I, accordingly, set aside the decree of the Court below and restore that of the Assistant Collector with costs in this Court and in the Court below.

Civil Procedure Code (V. of 1908), ss. 17, 38, 39—Mortgage comprising properties in two Districts—Execution of mortgage decree—Jurisdiction of Court in one District to sell property situated in other District—Mortgage decree, nature of—Specific performance.

Where mortgaged properties are situated in two Districts, and the mortgage decree is executed in the Court of one District, that Court has jurisdiction to sell the property which is situated in the other District. [p. 901, col. 2].

No Court can execute a decree in which the subject matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property situated entirely outside the local limits of its jurisdiction. But in cases ofdecrees for sale of mortgaged properties an exception has been recognized. [p 901, col. 2].

Obiter:—A mortgage decree "is practically a decree for specific performance of the contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee" and where that is so "the authority given by section 17 of the Code of Civil Procedure must include the authority to make an order of this kind, that the property shall be sold, and to direct the mode in which the sale shall take place." JUDGMENT.

DAS, J.—It has been contended before us that the Subordinate Judge of Gaya had no jurisdiction to sell the property which was in Patna. It must be remembered that the decree which was being executed in the Gaya Court was a mortgage decree and that the mortgage comprised properties situated both in Gaya and Patna. In these circumstances the question arises whether the Subordinate Judge of Gaya had jurisdiction to sell the property in Patna. No doubt the provisions of section 38 of the Code read with those of section 39 indicate the acceptance of the view by the legislature that no Court can execute a decree in which the subject-matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property situated entirely outside the local limits of its jurisdiction. But as was pointed out by Mookerjee J. in Begg Dunlop & Co. v. Jagannath Marwari (1). "In cases of decrees for sale of mortgaged properties an exception has been recognized."—See Meseyk v. Steel & Co. (2), Kartick Nath Pandey v. Telukdhari Lall (3), Gopi Mohan Roy v. Doybaki Nundun Sen (4), Tincouri Debya v. Shib Chandra Pal Chowdhury (5), Lakman Pundeh v. Maddan Mohun Shey (6) and Jahar v. Kamini Deb (7). Sir W. Comer Petheram in the case in Meseyk v. Steet & Co., (2) clearly indicated the principle upon which the Court acts in cases of this nature. He pointed out that a mortgage-decree "is practically a decree for specific performance of the contract between the mortgagor and mortgagee" and where that is so" the authority given by section 19 of the Code of Civil Procedure must include the authority to make an order of this kind, that the property shall be sold, and to direct the made in which the sale shall take place." In my opinion, the authorities are conclusive on this point. It makes no difference that the property at Gaya had been sold at a previous execution case. The original authority remains and the Gaya Court could execute that authority by directing the sale of the Patna property. It is also contended that the Gaya Court could not direct its peon to serve the sale processes in Patna. I can find no merit whatever in this argument.

The result is that the order passed by the learned Subordinate Judge must be affirmed and this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

There can be no pre-emption where the pre-emption clause in the Wajib-ul-arz, furnishes internal evidence negativing the custom of pre-emption. [p. 902, col. 2]

The ordinary presumption raised by an entry in a Wajib-ul-arz regarding the custom of pre-emption is not rebutted by the fact that hundred years ago the village was owned by a single proprietor and that even to-day it is only the descendants of that proprietor who are co-sharers in the village. [p. 902, col, 2].

APPEAL from the decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, confirming a decree of the Munsif, Kerakat.

Messrs. Haribans Sahai and Kailas Nath Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. Peary Lal Banerji, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is a defendants' appeal arising out of a suit for pre-emption. The claim related to shares in four villages. With the fourth village we are not now concerned in appeal. Both the Courts below have decreed the claim in respect of the whole share sold in Hasanpur and half of the shares sold in Pauni and Walipur. They have, however, found that the consideration of Rs. 7,000, mentioned in the sale-deed, was not the true consideration and have fixed it at Rs 3,000.

As regards the village Walipur, we are of opinion that the claim cannot be decreed. The plaintiffs, in order to prove that a custom of pre-emption exists in the village, relied upon a wajib-ul-arz of the year 1881 which contains a pre-emption clause similar to the clause in the wajib-ul-arz which was before the Full Bench, in the case of Randhir Singh v. Rajpal Missir (1), (F. A. F. O. No. 85 of 1923, decided on the 18th of December, 1923). It was held therein that such a clause furnished an internal evidence negativing the existence of a custom. We must, therefore, hold that no custom of pre-emption has been proved to exist in Walipur. The claim as regards the share sold in Walipur must be dismissed.

As to Hasanpur and Pauni, the first point raised on behalf of the defendants-appellants is that the dakbandi shows that in the year 1201 Fasli, corresponding to 1796 A. D., the villages were owned by a single proprietor named Subsa Tewari. It has also been proved by the defendants' witnesses that at the present moment it is only the descendants of Subsa Tewari who are co-sharers in these villages. The plaintiffs relied on the wajib-ul-arz of 1881, which is still the wajib-ul-arz of the current settlement, the district of Jaunpur being permanently settled, and which wajib-ul-arz contains a clear entry of a record of custom. We are of opinion that the presumption raised by the entry in the said wajib ul-arz has not been rebutted by the circumstance that more than 100 years ago the villages were owned by a single proprietor. The Court below has pointed out that the two sales which are known to have taken place, are such that the first one had taken place in favour of a co-sharer and as to the second one, though it had taken place in favour of a stranger, ultimately a part of the property was returned to the vendors. It was of opinion that these two instances furnished proof that the custom was at least being observed in the villages. Whether this is so or not, we are of opinion that the ordinary presumption which arises from the entry in the wajib-ul-arz has not been rebutted.

As regards the village Hasanpur, there can be no doubt that there is a clear preference given to co-sharers in the same patti as against the co-sharers in the other patti. Defendants Nos. 4 to 7 are co-sharers in the village but they are not co-sharers in the same patti in which the vendors and the plaintiffs own shares. Defendants Nos. 1 to 3 are perfect strangers. The plaintiffs have, therefore, a preference as against all the vendees.

In the village Pauni the wajib-ul-arz gives the right of pre-emption to two categories of pre-emptors. The first is an ekjaddi co-sharer and the other is a co-sharer in the village. The Courts below have found that the plaintiffs cannot bring themselves within the first category of the ekjaddi co-sharers. They are therefore, mere co-sharers in the village. Defendants Nos. 4 to 7 also are co-sharers in the same village while defendants Nos 1 to 3 are not co-sharers at all. The plaintiffs' claim as against defendants Nos. 1 to 3 must, therefore, be decreed but should be dismissed as against defendants Nos. 4 to 7. We find it, however, that there is a clear specification in the sale-deed that each set of vendees has taken only one-half of the share sold. The plaintiffs' claim, therefore, with regard to Pauni must be decreed for half of the property sold as against defendants Nos 1 to 3. It is necessary to clear the point as the decree which has been passed by the Court below is not very clear.

There was a dispute as to the price in the Courts below. The bulk of the sale consideration recited in the sale-deed was shown before the Sub-Registrar, but the Courts below were not satisfied that it represented the true consideration and were of opinion that the consideration had been immensely inflated. They then proceeded to work out the true value of the property sold. The Court of first instance thought that inasmuch as 11 bighas, 8 5|13 biswas of sir land had been sold, the price at the rate of Rs. 250 per bigha came to Rs. 2,955. It then added to this sum Rs. 45 as representing the value of the sir income. The total, in its opinion, came to Rs. 3,000. The lower Appellate Court has accepted that figure and said that this seems to be correct, if the area of sir land sold is taken to be about 12 bighas and the rental Rs. 8 per bigha. As we are now dismissing the claim with regard to a part of the property, it is apparent that the value of the portion decreed will have to be calculated afresh. We are not satisfied that the way in which the Courts below have arrived at the figure of Rs. 3,000 is necessarily correct. They appear to have ignored the areas of uncultivated land, about which only Rs. 45 had been allowed. We are not in a position to ascertain and apportion the sale consideration or the market value of that portion of the property, in regard to which the claim of the plaintiffs is to be decreed. It is, therefore, necessary that the market value of the shares in respect of Hasanpur and Pauni with regard to which the claim of the plaintiffs is being decreed, should be ascertained with due regard to the profits derivable from the same. We direct the lower Appellate Court accordingly to determine after taking such additional evidence as the parties may adduce—

(1) What is the market value of the share sold in Hasanpur? and (2) What is the market value of half the share sold in Pauni?

Two months' time will be allowed for return of the findings and ten days will be allowed from the date of receipt of the findings to file objections.

Second Appeal—Finding not based on legal evidence—High Court whether can interfere.

The High Court can, in second appeal, revise a finding recorded by the lower Appellate Court which is not based on legal evidence. [p. 904, col. 2].

Where, therefore, a plaintiff rests his case upon establishment of title, the mere fact that the adjoining plot happens to be a courtyard or outer compound of a house and belongs to a certain person does not show that the plot on which the house stands must also belong to that person and a finding to that effect can be set aside in appeal. [p. 904, col. 2].

AHIDANNABI v. NAGENDRA LAL

Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 2nd Court, Faridpur, dated the 13th July 1921, modifying the decree of the Munsif, Faridpur, dated the 27th April 1920.

Babu Jahnabi Charan Das Gupta, for the Appellant.

Babu Gunada Charan Sen, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for recovery of possession of three plots of land on declaration of their title thereto-the plots being $\frac{169}{1551}$, 169 and 136. With regard to the first plot, the Court of first instance held that they had right to that land but that right was extinguished by limitation On appeal the learned Subordinate Judge has found that the plaintiffs were able to prove their possession within 12 years of the suit and has given the plaintiffs a decree in respect of that plot. The present appeal in respect of that plot has not been pressed and we do not think that on the findings come to by the lower Appellate Court we are entitled to interfere with that portion of the judgment.

As regards plot No. 169 the learned Munsif found that it did not belong to the plaintiffs' jote and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit. On appeal, the learned Subordinate Judge has given the plaintiffs a decree and hence the appeal by the defendants. The finding of the first Court was based upon several items of evidence one of which was the admission by the father of plaintiffs Nos. 1 and 2, who was a witness on their behalf. His evidence is that Saritulla, the admitted tenant of the land, held his homestead and palan under both Surjamani and Ratanmoni. The plaintiffs claim their title through Surjamani and the defendants through Ratanmani. This evidence shows that plots 169 and 169/1551 which taken together formed a complete tract in the possession of Saritulla and it has been found that plot 169/1551 belonged to Surjamani and therefore, to the plaintiffs. The learned Munsif found that the other plot 169 must belong to Ratanmani's share. In this conclusion he is supported by the record of rights in which this plot is recorded as in the possession of defendant No. 1. The learned Subordinate Judge has dealt with the evidence relating to plot 169/1551 and has found that it belongs to the plaintiffs and that they were in possession of the same through their tenant Saritulla up to 1907. This plot he finds to be palan and plot No. 169 is a house attached to it. He, therefore, draws the conclusion that plot 169 must also belong to the same person to whom the former plot belonged. This opinion is also based upon the admission by the defendants that both the plots form really one bigger plot. The learned Subordinate Judge however, has not found the source of the plaintiffs' title and has not referred to any documentary evidence in support of this. He has not taken into consideration the admission made by the plaintiffs' witnesses on which the learned Munsif relied, nor has he expressly stated anywhere that there is sufficient evidence on the record in respect of plot 169 which successfully rebuts the presumption in favour of the correctness of the Record of Rights We do not think that the learned Judge was right in the way in which he has treated this portion of the case. It is urged by the respondents that as the conclusion which the learned Judge has drawn from the fact that when the adjoining plot is palan and belongs to the plaintiffs, this plot must also belong to the plaintiffs, is an inference of fact and we ought not to interfere with it in second appeal. We do not think that we are unable to revise a finding recorded by the Court of appeal below which is not based upon any legal evidence. The conclusion of fact must be drawn from certain other facts from which it may legitimately be drawn. In our opinion, from the mere fact that the adjoining plot happens to be a courtyard or outer compound of a house and belongs to a certain person, it ought not to be concluded in a case where the plaintiffs' suit rests upon establishment oftitle, that the plot on which the house stands must also belong to that person. We hold that the finding arrived at by the learned Subordinate Judge upon this point is not satisfactory as not based on legal evidence, and should therefore be set aside. In this connection the question of limitation may be considered. It appears that Saritulla was a tenant holding both these plots and he was treated as a tenant by both the parties. The plaintiffs claim him as their tenant whereas the defendants obtained a decree against him in the Civil Court and brought the jote to sale in execution.

It is, therefore, possible that this man was a tenant of both parties in respect of two different plots ; but we express no opinion upon the evidence. We only wish to point out that it may have a bearing upon the consideration of the question of title as well as on the question of limitation. With regard to limitation the finding on the learned Judge is that though the defendants brought the holding of Saritulla to sale in 1906, there is no evidence as to when they took possession of it through Court. But there is evidence that they settled the land of Saritulla with other persons in October 1907. The present suit was brought in April 1919 and the learned Judge holds that the suit is not time-barred on the ground that Saritulla continued to be the tenant of the plaintiffs down to 1907, when the land was settled with other persons. This piece of evidence that Saritulla had possession of this plot in 1907 as a tenant under the plaintiffs and the question of limitation are so mixed up that it would not be possible to consider one of them disassociated from the other. We are therefore of opinion that the learned Subordinate Judge should consider the question of the title and limitation together in respect of plot No. 169. This disposes of the appeal.

There is a cross-objection filed by the plaintiffs in respect of plot No. 136. Their grievance is that the learned Subordinate Judge has not considered the evidence relating to that plot fully. With reference to this plot, the finding of the Subordinate Judge is in these terms : "Then first I deal with plot No. 136. The plaintiffs fired blank shots only. There is not a title of documentary evidence in plaintiff's favour. Then from documents before this Court plaintiffs sadly and signally failed to prove their shadow of title and interest or that this land falls within their jama and this land necessarily should go to defendants." The plaintiffs have drawn our attention to five documents on record, the earliest being of 1877, which, they allege, show their title to and possession of, this property. This plot is not mentioned in these documents as the cadastral survey was made after them ; but it can be ascertained from the description and evidence if this plot was included in those documents. The learned Munsif has not considered the recitals in those documents on the ground that they were contradicted by the evidence of the plaintiff's father. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, does not appear from what he has stated in respect of that plot to have considered these pieces of evidence. It is just possible that on a consideration of those documents he may be of opinion that this plot is not covered by those documents. But it is desirable that he should say something more than what he has already said, viz., "that there is not a title of documentary evidence." After expressing himself thus the learned Judge again refers to the same documents and says "then from documents before this Court plaintiffs sadly and signally failed to prove their title." We think that this part of the case has not been properly dealt with by him.

The result, therefore, is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the lower Appellate Court in so far as it relates to plots Nos. 169 and 136 is set aside and the case remitted to that Court for a re-hearing of the appeal in respect of plots Nos. 169 and 136 in accordance with the observation contained in this judgment. Each party should bear its own costs of this appeal. In other respects the decree of the Court below will stand.

KHAIRULLA v. DHANRUPMAL

The effect of the judgment in a suit brought in accordance with O XXI, r. 63 Civil Procedure Code, is to supersede the order passed upon a claim made under r. 58 and to render it inconclusive. [p. 908, col. 2.]

Kisorimohun Roy v. Hassukh Das, 17 C. 486; 17 I A. 17 ; 13 Ind. Jur. 452 : 5 Sar. P. C. J. 472 ; 8 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 830 (P.C.), referred to.

A suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code is a continuation of claim proceedings. It is a suit to set aside the order passed upon the claim and is merely a form of appeal in the guise of an original suit. [p. 909, col. 1.]

Veera Pannadi v. KaruppaPannadi, 2 Ind. Cas. 980; 6 M. L. T. 154 ; Phul Kumari v. Ghan Thyam Misra; 35 C. 202 at p. 207; 7 C. L. J. 36 ; 12 C. W. N. 169; 10 Bom. L. R. 1; 5 A. L. J. 10; 17 M. Cas. 11 ; 26 M. L. J. 449 ; 38 M. 535, referred to.

A private transfer of the attached property, after the date of its release, at the instance of a claimant or objector, is bad on the ground of lis pendens, and does not affect the right of the party in whose favour the suit may be decided. [p. 909, col. 1.]

Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Saheb, 25 Ind. Cas. 11; 26 M. L. J. 449 ; 38 M. 535, relied upon.

An order of release under O. XXI, r. 60, Civil Procedure Code, is not final but provisional, and although it operates to prevent the attaching creditor from proceeding to sell the attached property, it does not operate so as at once to remove the attachment and leave the judgment-debtors free to deal with the property as they like. If they do deal with it, they and those with whom they deal, do so subject to the result of the suit as to the attachment being maintained. [p. 909, col. 1.]

Bonomali Rai v. Prosunno Narain Chowdhry, 28 C. 829 at pp. 833, 834 ; 12 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 551, relied upon.

Ordinarily, for a decree-holder to execute his decree for money two things are at least essential. Either the person or the property of the judgment-debtor must be made available against which the execution could issue; if his property be not available, at least the arrest of his person must be possible. [p. 912, col. 1.]

Conduct is the best proof of intention. [p. 912, col. 1.]

Under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, the word "fraud", is used in a much wider sense than that in which it is generally used in English Law. Locking up the house so as to prevent attachment of moveable property ; or evading arrest by any contrivance ; or dishonestly evading payment by eluding service of warrant, is a fraud within the meaning of the section. Similarly, a fictitious transfer of property made by a judgment-debtor to defeat or delay the execution of a decree, that may be passed against him, amounts to fraud within the meaning of the section. [p. 913, col 1.]

Bhagu Jetha v. Malek Bawasaheb, 9 B. 318; 5 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 211 ; Visalatchi Ammal v. Sivasankara Taker, 4 M. 202 ; 1 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 1039, referred to.

Fraud on the part of a judgment-debtor at any stage of the execution gives a new starting point for the period of limitation. Therefore, a judgment-debtor's continued absence from the jurisdiction of the executing Court is a continuing fraud, and keeps the right of the decree-holder to apply for execution alive, from day to day during his period of absence from the jurisdiction of the Court. [p. 913, col. 1 & 2.]

If an Executing Court holds rightly or wrongly that a decree is executable, even after the twelve years have elasped, and orders execution to issue and the judgment debtor does not challenge the order by way of appeal, review or revision, the order is binding on him and on principles analogous to those of res judicata strictly so-called, he is precluded from challenging the order at a subsequent stage of execution proceedings.

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Jubbulpore, in Miscellaneous Appeal No. 7 of 1921, dated the 22nd April 1922.

Mr. M. Y. Sharif, for the Appellants.

R. B. N. G. Bose, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of an order rejecting the decree-holders' application for rateable distribution upon an objection of the judgment-debtor that it is barred by limitation on the ground that the decree dated 25th January, 1899 was not executable owing to the bar of section 48, Civil Procedure Code.

On the 26th September 1898 one Dhanrupmal executed a usufructuary mortgage of his entire estate in favour of his relative one Chandmal. He was indebted to other several creditors and while his affairs were in a critical condition the aforesaid mortgage was brought into existence. This led to the institution of several suits against him by his creditors. The Civil Suit No. 133 of 1898 out of the execution proceedings in which the present appeal has arisen was one of such suits. The plaintiff, Mirza Amir Beg, got a decree in it on 25th January 1899. The very first application for execution was made on 30th January 1899. It was followed by another one dated 28th August 1900 but nothing could be recovered. It appears that after the negotiations between the creditors and Dhanrupmal's agent at Jubbulpore at some of which Chandmal's representative was also present for the purpose of discussing the terms of the proposed composition had failed owing to Dhanrupmal's insistence that the creditors should make a payment of Rs. 15,000 to enable him to get the mortgage revoked, Chandmal put in a claim in each action under section 278 of the old Civil Procedure Code for exemption of Dhanrupmal's property from attachment on the ground that the same was in his own possession as a usufructuary mortgagee. The claims were summarily rejected on the 10th of May 1901. Chandmal, therefore, instituted suits against the attaching creditors for setting aside the summary decision in the objection cases. Suit No. 34 of 1902 was the suit filed against the decree-holder in Suit No. 133 of 1898 referred to above. That suit was decreed by the District Judge on 31st October 1905 holding that the mortgage was a bona fide transaction. Chandmal had joined Dhanrupmal and his sons as parties to the suit apparently with the idea of having an adjudication as between all persons interested in the result of the litigation. Against this judgment Mirza Amir Beg, the predecessor-in-title of the present appellants before me, filed on 15th January 1906 Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1906 in the Court of Divisional Judge, Jubbulpor and pressed for the reversal of the decree on the ground amongst others that the mortgage was a fraud practised by Dhanrupmal in collusion with Chandmal on the whole body of creditors and that it was not a bona fide transaction. Dhanrupmal and his sons were made parties co-respondents to this appeal.

Amongst the other suits against the other creditors was the one against Munshi Jankiprasad which gave rise to First Appeal No. 11 of 1906. That appeal and other First Appeals, Nos. 5, 6, 7 and 8 of 1906 were consolidated together and decided by the Additional Judicial Commissioner on 16th March 1907. It was held therein that the mortgage was fraudulent and not a bona fide transaction. The appeals were, therefore, allowed and the mortgagee's suit and other claims were dismissed. The decision of the Additional Judicial Commissioner was ultimately confirmed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in their judgment dated 23rd January 1919, which is reported as Ghunsham Das v. Uma Pershad (1).

After the First Appeals, Nos. 5, 6, 7, 8 and 11 of 1906 were instituted by the creditors in the Court of the Judicial Commissioner, the Divisional Judge on 21st March 1906 passed an order dated 21st March 1906 submitting the record of Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1906 along with four other regular and Miscellaneous appeals filed in his Court for such orders of the Judicial Commissioner in regard to their transfer as he may see fit to pass. No orders for transfer were, however, passed and the records were returned with the following suggestion : " It will be open to the Divisional Judge to keep the appeals pending and to await the decision of the connected appeals by this Court". (Vide Registrar's Letter No. 3670, dated 23rd April 1906). On receipt of this letter the Divisional Judge kept the appeals before him pending to await the decision of the cases in his Court. Consequently Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1906 remained pending from 8th May 1906 to 4th April 1907 to await the decision of this Court. As stated above First Appeal No. 11 of 1906 was decided on 16th March 1907. The appeal before the Divisional Judge was, therefore, heard and decided on 13th April 1907 as between Mirza Amir Beg as the appellant and Chandmal as the sole respondent, the other respondent Dhanrupmal and his sons having been given up by the appellant. The Divisional Judge thinking that the judgment of the Additional Judicial Commissioner in the connected cases decided on the same evidence in one " judgment must obviously govern " this appeal found that " the mortgage of Chandmal must stand postponed to the claims of, the plaintiff, and the decree holders, in the connected cases, and setting aside the two decrees and the three orders of the lower Court dismissed Chandmal's two suits and three objections which gave rise to the two regular civil appeals and three Miscellaneous civil appeals made to his Court. How far this procedure was correct is not for me to consider at this stage. But the matter had come up before this Court in connected Second Appeals Nos. 275 to 279 of 1907 and was disposed of by a judgment dated

(1) 50 Ind. Cas. 264 ; 15 M. L. R. 68 ; 17 A. L. J. 410 ; 36 M. L. J. 483 ; 21 Bom L. R. 472 ; 23 C. W. N. 817 ; (1919) M. W. N. 513 ; 10 L. W. 511 (P.C.)

KHAIRULLA v. DHANRUPMAL

28th November 1907 in Second Appeal No. 275 of 1907. The particular second appeal, which was preferred against the decision in Civil Appeal No. 2 of 1906 and with which we are concerned, is Second Appeal No. 276 of 1907. Stanyon, A.J.C., who had disposed of the first Appeal No. 11 of 1906 heard these second appeals also. He writes regarding his own judgment in F.A. No. 11 of 1906 as follows:—

> "My judgment is in terms expressly confined to such cases as were before me and could not be and was not a judgment in any case whereof I was not seised."

It could not, therefore, be the basis of the Divisional Judge's judgment. The parties (the attaching creditor and the mortgagee) therefore, realised the difficulties of a remand and thought fit to come to a compromise. A decree in terms of the compromise dated 22nd November 1907 was accordingly ordered to be drawn in the second appeal. One of the terms of the compromise was that the first Court's decree dated 31st March 1905 was to be deemed as reversed or confirmed or varied and the first appellate Court's decree dated 13th April 1907 confirmed or reversed or varied according as Chandmal's appeal will be dismissed or allowed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and also that neither party shall be entitled to apply for the execution of this decree or of the decree of the Divisional Judge and District Judge in this and other cases, pending the receipt in this Court of the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in the case of Jankiprasad in First Appeal No. 11 of 1906.

Their Lordships of the Privy Council decided the case of Jankiprasad on 23rd January 1919 as already stated above. It is not, however, clear when the above decision was received in this Court. The reversal of the first Court's decree in this case, which the Divisional 'Judge had ordered was thus expressly declared to be only provisional and subject to confirmation by the Judical Committee of the Privy Council in Jankiprasad's case, and it is thus clear that the decree of the Divisional Judge was not to be executable until it became confirmed on 23rd January 1919 by the terms of the decision of the Privy Council in the connected case, the power to execute being suspended till then. This means that the success of the attaching creditor was really no success until the mortgagee's appeal to the Privy Council was unsuccessful. O. XXI, r. 60 and 61, Civil Procedure Code provide that according as the Court is satisfied that the property was, or was not, at the time it was attached, in the possession of the judgment-debtor as his own property, on account of, or not on account of, any other person, or, was, or was not, in possession'of, some other person in trust for him, the Court shall allow or disallow the claim. The order allowing or rejecting the claim contemplated by these provisions is a summary order. Such a summary order disallowing the claim was passed in this case on 10th May 1901 and it was conclusive subject to the result of a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code. Their Lordships of the Privy Council have laid down in Kissorimohun Roy v. Harsukh Das (2), that the effect of the judgment in the suit brought in accordance with this rule is to supersede the order passed upon a claim made under r. 58 and to render it inconclusive. The mortgagee succeeded in obtaining such a judgment in Suit No. 34 of 1902 on 31st October 1905 and the order dated 10th May 1901 was rendered inconclusive, so that the claims of the attaching decree-holders to obtain satisfaction of their decrees out of the property attached were superseded by the claim of the mortgagee Chandmal, and the property was, therefore, not saleable in execution of the decree dated 25th January 1899. In appeal, that judgment was reversed and the order passed in the objection case rejecting the claim was restored, with the result that the said decree dated 25th January 1899 could be executed against it. The decision in second appeal, however, was that the decree of the Divisional Judge's Court upholding the attaching decree-holder's right to execute the decree dated 25th January 1899 was not to be operative until the receipt of the Privy Council decision. It would thus be clear that the decision in the suit contemplated by O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, which renders the summary order on the claim petition inconclusive, was inoperative and was not to take effect until 23rd January 1919. In short, the decree dated 25th January 1899 remained incapable of execution against the property covered by the mortgage in spite of the apparent success attained on 13th April 1907 by the attaching creditor in his appeal to the Divisional Judge's Court, until 23rd January 1919, as the right of the decree-holders to show the decree of the Divisional Judge to the executing Court and to move it to revive the attachment of the property and proceed with the execution of the decree was treated as non-existent until 23rd January 1919.

This position will be clear if one knows what the object and scope of a suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, is. In Veera Pannadi v. Karuppa Pannadi (3), it has been held that a suit under this rule is one to set aside the order passed upon the claim and is "a form of appeal therefrom." It has similarly been held that a plaint in such a suit is "a plaint for review of a summary decision" see Phul Kumari v Ghan Thyam Misra (4), Jamahar Kumari Bibi v. Askaran Boid (5).

In Krishnappa Chetty v. Abdul Khader Saheb (6), it was held that a suit under this rule is "a continuation of claim proceeding." It is merely "a form of appeal in the guise of an original suit." In this Madras case it was held further that a private transfer of the attched property after the date of its release at the instance of a claimant or objector, was bad on the ground of lis pendens and would not affect the right of the party who may be successful in the suit.

In Bonomali Rai v. Prosunno Narain Chowdhry (7), it was laid down that 'the order for release at the instance of a claimant, is not final but provisional, as this rule declares it to be subject to the result of any suit which the attaching creditor may bring "to establish the right which he claims to the property in dispute." And although an order under rule 60 operates to prevent the attaching creditor from proceeding to sell the attached property, it does not operate so as at once to remove the attachment and leave the judgment-debtor free to deal with the property as they like. If they do deal with it, they and those with whom they deal, do so subject to the result of the suit as to the attachment being maintained." The same reasoning will hold good even where the order is passed under O. XXI, r. 61, Civil Procedure Code.

In this view of the case the decree made in Suit No. 34|1902 by the District Judge on 31st October 1905, which would have rendered the order dated 10th May 1901 inconclusive and raised the attachment was itself rendered inconclusive by the decree of the Divisional Judge's Court dated 3rd April 1907, but the operation of this decree was again in its turn suspended by the decree in second appeal until 23rd January 1919 with the result that the attachment already effected and which remained in full force and effect by the rejection of the claim on the execution side became revived on 13th April 1907, but was not to bear any fruit for the decree-holders' benefit or bring any assets until the same became confirmed by decision of the Privy Council on which it was contingent. The success was in short illusory or certain according as the Privy Council would declare the mortgage to be bogus and fraudulent or otherwise. The right of the decree-holder to proceed or not to proceed with the execution of the decree dated 25th January 1899 on the strength of the said attachment would, either become revived as it were on 23rd October 1919, or be lost for ever on that day, so far as the property covered by the mortgage was concerned. It is needless to say that it was not necessary that the judgment-debtor must be joined as a party to such a suit. See Ghasiram v. Mangal Chand (8) and Durga Charan Sarkar v. Jotindra Mohan Tagore (9). The decree-holder's right to execute the decree thus remained suspended and in the air, all along ever since the date of the objection based on the bogus or fraudulent mortgage was made, and although it became revived on 13th April 1907 (not 10th March 1907 as stated by the Subordinate Judge in his order dated 9th April 1922) temporarily up to 28th November 1907, it became suspended again until 23rd January 1919 when alone the claim proceedings may be said to have come to a legal termination. The decree-holder was seeking to establish that the property was liable to atachment and sale as the property of the judgment-debtor free of incumbrance, while the mortgagee sought to establish that it was subject to the mortgage and, therefore, liable to be released from attachment and sale. The decree-hoder's right which had been declared 10th May 1901 in the claim proceedings took all this time until 23rd January 1919 to become conclusive as against the mortgagee. The decree-holder thus became free to execute the decree on 23rd January 1919 and not till then. I may at once say that whether the decree-holder kept the decree alive or not during all this interval the decree became executable on 23rd January 1919 and no question of limitation would at all arise, the attachment already effected revived and with it the right under section 73 Civil Procedure Code to claim rateable distribution also sprang into existence. In this view of the case it is unnecessary to see whether the decree was kept alive or not, because I am quite positive that had the judgment-debtor not executed the mortgage dated 26th September 1898 it would not have been possible for the mortgagee to prefer the claim and delay the execution of the decree. The mortgage was found to be a fraud practised in conjunction by the judgment-debtor and the mortgagee on the several creditors including this decree-holder. It could not be that it was a fraud on the part of the mortgagee only and not of the judgment-debtor. A very plausible inference, from this finding is that the decree-holder was "prevented from executing the decree" by "the fraud of the judgment-debtor."

The decree-holder was, however, not negligent in the discharge of his duty. He made his best endeavours to keep his decree alive in order that he may get satisfaction of his decree dated 25th January 1899 otherwise than by proceeding against the property covered by the mortgage, if any other property were to become available or if the judgment-debtor were to come within the jurisdiction of the execution Court and thus be amenable to the process of the Court. In order to leave no room for any objection on the score of want of diligence on his part he used to apply for execution of the decree from time to time as the following summary of the execution proceedings would show. For the sake of convenience the period may be divided into 2 parts (1) before the date of the Divisional Judge's decree and (2) after that date and down to the date of the Privy Council decision.

[The summary of execution proceedings being immaterial is omitted ED.]

After the Privy Council appeal of Chandmal was decided on 23 January 1919 and the decrees of the A. J.C. were finally upheld, this decree-holder again applied for execution of the decree on 27th August 1919. The question is whether in connection with this fresh application for execution the judgment-debtor is debarred from pleading that the decree was not executable under section 48, Civil Procedure Code. The executing Court suo motu again took the objection that the execution of the decree was barred under section 48, Civil Procedure Code (vide order dated 28th August 1919). On 21st November 1919 it recorded an order that the decree-holder appears to have rateable distribution out of the assets that may be realized in execution of other decrees and ordered notice to issue to judgment-debtor to show cause why further proceedings towards realization of the decretal sum should not be undertaken on the petition and the case was fixed for 16th January 1920. The notice to judgment-debtor was returned unserved, and he was absent at the hearing. The papers were ordered to be filed, pending receipt of assets by sale of the villages in execution of the other decrees the proceedings wherein had remained stayed pending decision of the Privy Council. On 26th July 1920 the decree-holder accordingly made an application for rateable distribution of the assets realized by sale as per order dated 16th January 1920. The judgment-debtor made his first appearance in this case on 21st January 1921 and through Mr. Kasturchand, Pleader, on 25th January 1921, a plea was raised to the effect that the last application for execution was barred by limitation under Article 182 and section 48, Civil Procedure Code, and that the decree-holder was not entitled to claim rateable distribution of the assets. Issues were framed and the Subordinate Judge after a scrutiny of the previous execution proceedings held in his order dated 4th October 1921 that the Judges who passed the orders dated 2nd December 1916 and 16th January 1916 had considered that the applications for execution were in time, but that it was doubtful whether they would operate as res judicata. He also held that the applicant had been taking steps for the execution of the decrees from time to time but was evidently prevented, by the fraud practised by the judgment debtor in executing the bogus mortgage of his property, from executing his decree fully within the prescribed period of 12 years, and that this fraud was exposed finally by the decree passed by the Privy Council. He accordingly held that the application was not barred by time under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, and directed that the decree-holder shall get rateable distribution. The District Judge, however, upset this order on appeal on the ground that the decision on the question of fraud being upon a mixed question of law and fact hah taken the judgment-debtor by surprise, and remanded the case for the trial of the following issue and called for findings after taking evidence if any :—

"Was the decree-holder Mirza Ami Beg prevented by the fraud of the judgment-debtor Dhanrupmal from executing his decree full within the prescribed period of 12 years?"

After remand no evidence was offered although a date was given but certain statements were recorded. The Subordinate Judge held that the execution of the decree was delayed until 10th March 1907 by the execution of the fictitious mortgage, but that the decree-holder was not prevented by the fraud of Dhanrupmal from executing his decree fully within the period of 12 years. The appeal preferred by the decree-holder against this order, to the District Judge's Court was unsuccessful. The decree-holder has, therefore, come up in second appeal and urges that this application should be held to be within time. The case has been very fully argued before me and I am of opinion that the appeal must succeed.

In view of the findings of the Subordinate Judge it is clear that it was the judgment-debtor's fraud which prevented the decree-holder from executing his decree up to 10th March 1907. The question, therefore, narrows down to the period subsequent to 10th March 1907 or more correctly 13th April 1907 and ending with 25th January 1911 when the 12 years' limit laid down by section 48, Civil Procedure Code, expired and also the period following after 25th January 1911 down to 23rd January 1919.

During the whole of the period between 13th April 1907 and 23rd January 1919 or major portion thereof the judgment-debtor appears to have been away from his villages and estate, and gone to live beyond British India. It is argued for the decree-holder that the judgment debtor's absence had prevented him from realizing the fruits of his decree. Besides, by reason of his agreement with Chandmal which was embodied in this Court's decree dated 28th November 1907, the decree-holder could not proceed against the property covered by the mortgage. He could not also similarly apply for arrest of the judgment-debtor as he was away from the jurisdiction of the Court. In this way it is said for the decree-holder that the judgment-debtor prevented the execution of the decree, right from the date it was passed to the disposal of the last application dated 24th August 1917 which was struck off as infructuous.

On the other hand on behalf of the judgment-debtor it is urged that after the decree-holder got a decree from the Divisional Judge's Court declaring that the mortgage was bogus and fraudulent, it was open to him to execute his decree, but if he voluntarily and of his own accord and without the consent or request of the judgment-debtor binds himself by an independent compromise with Chandmal not to execute his decree so long as the Privy Council decision was out, it is his own fault if he put off the execution. He cannot fasten the blame on the judgment-debtor and say that he was prevented by the fraud of the judgment-debtor from executing his decree. Reliance is placed on Govinda v. Umrao Singh (10). I do concede the position that the judgment-debtor was, technically speaking, not a party to the compromise and was not bound by its terms. Similarly, he could not take advantage of its terms as well. The judgment-debtor, however, appears to have taken full advantage of it because we have found him going away from the jurisdiction of the executing Court as if he had secured a sort of immunity from attachment of his property and from arrest of his own person. Ordinarily, for a decree holder to execute his decree for money two things are at least essential. Either the person or the property of the judgment-debtor must be made available against which the execution could issue; if his property be not available, at least the arrest of his person must be possible. If he keeps himself away from the jurisdiction of the Court, how is it to be possible for the decree-holder to execute the decree even by arrest. Had the judgment-debtor been actuated by a desire not to prevent the several decree-holders from taking out execution of their decrees against him, but wished to act fairly and honestly towards them, we should have expected him to act quite differently. The initial act of mortgaging the whole of the estate however fraudulent and collusive it may have been, was declared in this Court on 16th March 1907 to be bogus and fictitious against the decree-holders. This declaration cleared the cloud cast by his own act upon his own title, and he was once more told, as it were, by that Court that his property was free from the incumbrance and he could satisfy his debts out of the estate. Like an honest man he could have accepted the adjudication as binding and beneficial in his interests, and also for the ultimate benefit of his creditors, and arranged for the satisfaction of the several decrees outstanding against him or for a composition of their claims. But he did nothing of the kind. On the contrary he kept himself out of the way and also away from the jurisdiction of the Court. Such conduct on the judgment-debtor's part could not be looked upon except with disfavour. It smacks of a deep-laid fraud to defeat and delay the creditors and to obstruct the execution of the decrees already passed, and to put them off, as far as possible on the half chance of success of the appeal preferred to the Privy Council by his confederate Chandmal with whom he was clearly hand and glove, in the matter of shielding the property against the creditors. I have absolutely no doubt about the intentions of the judgment-debtor and I cannot infer anything but a deliberate fraud on the judgment-debtor's part. His conduct is the best proof of his intention.

The appellant's Counsel argues on the strength of Abdul Khadir v. Ajiyur Ahammad (11) that his client was vigilant in that he made repeated applications for execution of the decree within 3 years of the date of each previous application, and sometimes served notices on the judgment-debtor, and even obtained decisions on the very point of the bar of section 48, Civil Procedure Code, and also secured orders for attachment of the judgment-debtor's property, and that the decree still remained unsatisfied for no fault of his own. He also urges that it was the judgment-debtor's duty to attend before the executing Court and show cause against the applications for execution as also against the orders for execution passed thereon in spite of the bar of section 48, Civil Procedure Code, but he did not attend and raise any objections, and that this failure on the judgment-debtor's part now precludes him from urging that the decree is not executable after the lapse of 12 years from its date. Except so far as the property covered by the mortgage against which by virtue of the compromise he had bound himself not to execute the decree until Chandmal's appeal to the Privy Council was decided, he had done his best and been vigilant enough. In spite of his vigilance he could realize nothing. The facts and circumstances above referred to clearly show that he was "prevented from executing the decree by the fraud of the judgment-debtor" against the other property or the person of the judgment-debtor. Neither of them was available during the long interval between 13th April 1907 and 23rd January 1919.

It is next urged by or on behalf of the judgment-debtor that the mere execution of the mortgage-deed dated 26th September 1898 could not amount to a fraud on the part of the judgment-debtor so as to prevent the decree-holder from executing his decree dated 25th January 1899 especially after that mortgage has been held to be fictitious. Further it is said that nothing has been pointed out to shew that the judgment-debtor took any active part in perpetuating or keeping up the fraud once committed during the subsequent stages. Suffice it to say that the word 'fraud' used in section 48, Civil Procedure Code, has to be interpreted in a much wider sense than that in which it is generally used in English Law.

The case of Pattakara Annamalai Goundan v. Rangasami Chetti (12), lays down that fraud on the part of the judgment-debtor at any stage of the execution gives a new starting point for the period of limitation. Venkayya v. Raghava Charlu (13), Mohsin Ali v. Masoom Ali (14) and Second Appeal No. 224-B of 1918 by Mitra A. J. C., Mulla's Civil Procedure Code, page 143 (7th Edition).

Looking up the house so as to prevent attachment of moveable property, Bhagu Jetha v. Malex Bawasaheb (15) Venkayya v. Raghata Charlu (13), or evading arrest by any contrivance, or dishonestly evading payment by eluding service of warrant Pattakara Annamalai Goundan v. Rangasami Chetti (12), is a fraud within the meaning of this section. Similarly a fictitious transfer of his property made by a judgment-debtor to defeat or delay the execution of a decree that may be passed against him amounts to fraud within the meaning of this section see Visalatchi Ammal v. Sivasankara Taker (16). It is thus clear that the full execution of the decree within 12 years was prevented by the fraud of the judgment-debtor.

Moreover by reason of his omission to appear and object at the earlier stage, the judgment-debtor is precluded from raising objection to the executability of the decree at the subsequent stage of the case. See Palancheri Govinda Menon v. Pookota Kunti Krishna Mannadiar (17) see also Batten, J. C.'s decision in Jagannath v. Behari Lal (18), where it is held that on principles analogous to those of res judicata strictly so called, an order that an execution application is not time-barred though wrong could not be questioned in subsequent proceedings. Rightly or wrongly the executing Court had held that the decree was executable even after the 12 years had elapsed and ordered execution to issue. These orders are binding against the judgment-debtor as they had not been challenged by him by way of appeal or by review or revision. I am fully satisfied that even on the record of this case as it stands there is sufficient material for holding that the judgment-debtor by his fraud prevented the execution of the decree during the 12 years period ending 25th January 1911 and that even during the period that elapsed since then the execution of the decree was similarly prevented. The decision of Mitra A. J. C., in Second Appeal No. 244-B of 1918 on which the judgment-debtor's pleader relies is, therefore, distinguishable. It is also clear that the judgment-debtor is precluded, by reason of his omission to object to the previous execution applications being granted after the lapse of 12 years, from challenging the correctness of the previous orders which became binding as against him, by his own default.

The order dated 16th January 1920 holding the appellant entitled to rateable distribution was no doubt passed behind the back of the judgment-debtor but the question is not material as I have held that the judgment-debtor's continued absence from the jurisdiction of the Court was sufficient proof of his fraud down to 23rd January 1919 and onwards. The fraud was a continuing fraud, and kept the right of the decree holder to apply for execution alive, from day to day so long as the judgment-debtor kept himself away from the jurisdiction of the Court. He made his first appearance before the Court on 21st January 1921.

The property was attached by other decree-holders and was kept under the management of Receiver vide order dated 17th September 1907 in the execution proceedings arising out of Suit No. 120 of 1898. It is said that this Receiver was appointed by Collector, and that this management by the Collector also prevented the decree-holder from executing his decree in view of the provisions of Schedule III, r. 11 Civil Procedure Code, vide Shyam Karan v. The Collector of Benares (19). I have not been able to trace the Collector's proceedings. Assuming this to be a fact, the power of the decree-holders to execute the decree was certainly suspended until the Privy Council decision was out. The present decree-holder who was merely entitled to rateable distribution was not competent to proceed against that property until the Receiver actually sold the property and realized the sale proceeds or was in a position to realise them. This was not possible until the Court of final appeal had given its adjudication. I am prepared to go to the length of holding that by executing the martgage-deed the judgment-debtor must be deemed to have constituted Chandmal the instrument for practising fraud, not only against the decree-holders who went up before the Privy Council but also against others whom he through Chandmal practically forced to await the decision of the Privy Council. Dhanrupmal must, for all intents and purposes, be deemed to be substantially represented by Chandmal as if he was a party expressly by name to all the subsequent stages of the litigation which gave rise to the Privy Council appeal and on the final decision of which all the decree-holders had agreed to state the ultimate satisfaction of their several decrees.

I, therefore, hold that the decree-holder was prevented by the fraud of the judgment-debtor from executing his decree fully within 12 years and that he got a fresh start of limitation from day to day, and that the fraud continued down to the date when it was finally decided by the Privy Council on 23rd January 1919 that the mortgage was bogus and fraudulent. I, therefore, hold that the decree-holder is entitled to claim rateable distribution out of the assets realized in execution of the other decrees. The order appealed against, which has the force of a decree, is set aside and the case is remanded to the first Court with directions to admit the appellant as one of the persons entitled to rateable distribution. Costs in all Courts will be paid by the judgment-debtor. Counsel's fee Rs. 75.

CALCUTTA HIGH COURT.

APPEAL FROM APPELLATE DECREE NO. 466 OF 1922.

May 15, 1924.

Present :—Mr. Justice Suhrawardy and Mr. Justice Duval.

MOZHARUL ISLAM—DEFENDANT —APPELLANT

ABDUL GANI ALA—PLAINTIFF —RESPONDENT.

Indian Majority Act (IX of 1875), s. 2—"Acting in the matter of dower," meaning of—Muhammadan Minor, whether can enter into contract for dower—Contract Act (IX of 1872), s. 11.

The words in section 2 of the Indian Majority Act 'to act in the matter of dower' mean to do all acts in relation thereto, including entering into a contract for payment of dower, which are permissible under the personal law of the party free from the restriction of age put by the Indian Majority Act. [p. 916, col. 1.]

Section 11 of the Indian Contract Act does not militate against this view. [p. 916, col. 1.]

If a Mahomedan minor who is a major by his personal law but a minor under the Indian Majority Act enters into a marriage, as he is capable of doing, he must enter into a contract for payment of dower. Even if he does not do so, the law will presume such contract. [p. 915, col. 2.]

Abi Dhunimsa Bibi v. Muhammad Fathiuddin, 44 Ind. Cas. 293 ; 41 M 1026 ; 23 M. L T. 78 ; (1918) M. W. N 246 ; 25 M. L. J 466, not followed.

Section 2 of the Indian Majority Act has reserved to those who have under their personal law attained majority but have not yet attained it under that Act the right to act as majors in matters of marriage and dower and the fixing of the amount and nature of dower is an act in the matter of dower. [p. 916, col. 1.]

MOZHARUL ISLAM v. ABDUL GANI ALA

JUDGMENT.

Suhrawardy, J.—This appeal raises a question which to my mind does not demand an elaborate, though it needs, careful consideration. The suit was brought by the father of a deceased Mahomedan wife against the husband for his share of the dower due to the deceased wife. At the time of the marriage the appellant, who had a guardian of his person and property appointed by the Court was 20 years of age and legally his age of majority under the Indian Majority Act was postponed to 21 years. The defence was that at the time of the marriage the defendant was a minor under the Indian Majority Act and, therefore, incompetent to enter into a contract for payment of the dower. Both the Courts below have overruled the plea and held that the plaintiff is entitled to a decree The only point argued in this appeal is that despite anything in section 2 of the Indian Majority Act, 1875 a Mahomedan husband who is a minor according to the other sections of that Act read with section 11 of the Majority Act, is not competent to enter into a contract of dower. The whole argument was directed to the constructon of the words "to act in the matter of dower" occurring in section 2 of the Indian Majority Act. The learned Vakil for the appellant has been at pains to construe the words as not covering a contract for dower ; but I must express my inability to follow the forced construction attempted to be put upon them. His interpretation is that while payment of cash dower by such a minor is a good and valid payment, a contract for deferred dower cannot be entered into by such a minor. It is difficult to conceive that the meaning can be this as the capacity to pay a debt of dower, whether prompt or deferred presupposes the capacity to contract the debt. As I understand it this expression "to act in the matter of dower" means to act or do such acts as may relate to the dower. Section 2 of the Indian Majority Act also declares that the Act would not apply to any person acting in the mater of marriage. It is indisputable that dower is a necessary concomitant in a Mahomedan marriage. Some authorities have chosen to call it 'consideration for the marriage,' while others as payment' in honour of the wife. But there can be no Mahomedan marriage without a dower either fixed by the parties or presumed under the law. It is not disputed that 'acting in the matter of marriage,' means entering into a contract of marriage. If a Mahomedan minor who is a major by his personal law but a minor under the Indian Majority Act enters into a marriage, as he is capable of doing, he must enter into a contract for payment of dower. Even if he does not do so, the law will presume such contract. Reference has been made to the case of Abi Dhunimsa Bibi v. Muhammad Fathiuddin (1). There a minor Mahomedan wife a major according to her personal law but a minor according to the Indian Majority Act relinquished her dower on her husband's death-bed. The question was whether she had the capacity to do this and the learned Judges held that relinquishment of dower is not an act in the matter of dower This view may be correct though its correctness has been questioned by the recent learned editor of Sir Rowland Wilson's work on Anglo-Mahomedan Law, but it does not give us any assistance in deciding the present point. The remark in one passage of the judgment in that case gives some indications as to what the learned Judges had in mind in construing the words 'acting in the matter of dower'. The passage is as follows :—" Therefore in our opinion when the Legislature permitted a person to act in the matter of that dower it only intended to let person who was not otherwise competent under the law to act in the matter to initiate to the religious act or ceremony which under the personal law of the subject, he or she, was capable of initiating." Though this passage is not very clear I think it means that acting in the matter of marriage and dower is doing all things necessary for a valid marriage of which dower is a part. It is a matter of common knowledge that hundreds and hundreds of Mahomedans are in this country contracting marriage who have not attained majority under the Indian Majority Act but are competent under their personal law to do so and such persons by entering into marriage contracts take upon themselves the liability for payment of the dower. The view that has been placed before us by the appellant, if adopted, would revolutionise the Mahomedan society as it stands at present. I think that the words in section 2 of the Indian Majority Act 'to act in the matter of dower' mean to do all acts in relation thereto, including entering into a contract for payment of dower, which are permissible under the personal law of the party free from the restriction of age put by the Indian Majority Act. I am further of opinion that section 11 of the Indian Contract Act does not militate against this view. Therefore I hold that there is no substance in this appeal which must be dismissed with costs.

Duval, J.—I agree. It appears to me that section 2 of the Indian Majority Act has referred to those who have under their personal law attained majority but have not yet attained it under that Act the right to act as majors in matters of marriage and dower and the fixing of the amount and nature of dower is an act in the matter of dower. I agree that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Agra Tenancy Act (II of 1901) s. 159—Lambardar—Co-sharer—Revenue paid by lambardar on behalf of co-sharer—Revenue also paid by co-sharer direct into treasury—Lambardar, whether entitled to recover from co sharer.

Where a lambardar pays revenue on behalf of a co-sharer under him and after payment by the lambardar the co-sharer also pays it direct into the treasury, without informing the lambaraar, the lambardar is entitled to recover from the co-sharer the amount paid by him on his behalf. [p. 917, col. 1.]

Appeal from a decree of the Additional District Judge, Saharanpur, dated the 20th December 1922.

Mr. Nehal Chand, for the Appellants.

Mr. U. S. Bajpai, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—This is a suit under section 159 of the Tenancy Act to recover revenue paid to Government by the plaintiff as lambardar on behalf of the defendant who is a co-sharer under his lambardari.

The facts of the case are unusual. The lambaraar is the person primarily responsible under section 144 of the Land Revenue Act for paying the revenue into the tahsil. It is the duty of the co-sharers to pay their quota through the lambardar. If the revenue is not paid, it is the lambardar who in the first instance will be subject to coercive process. In this case the revenue in dispute relates to the years 1325 and 1326 Fasli. The revenue of 1325 was paid by the lambardar into the tahsil in two instalments on 5th February 1918 and 7th June 1918 respectively. A week later on 11th February 1918 the defendant paid into the treasury direct her share of the first instalment which had already been paid by the lambardar. The second instalment was similarly paid by her on 2nd July 1918, nearly a month after the payment by the plaintiff. The defendant in making the payment did not state that it was being made on account of the share held under the lambardari of the plaintiff. She wrongly entered her own name as lambardar, and instead of recognising that the payment was being made twice over, the tahsil officials by mistake credited the revenue to the account of two other lambardars, this being a village in which there is more than one lambardar. In 1320 the plaintiff paid the revenue due from him, including the defendants share, in three instalments, on 1st February, 8th July and 16th August 1919 respectively. The defendant paid in two instalments, on 3rd March and 27th June 1919. The plaintiff, when he paid his second and third instalments, had not been informed and was not aware that any payment had been made by the defendant. The defendant again failed to inform the tahsil officials that the money was being paid on account of the share held under the plaintiff's lambardari, and the tahsil officials again made a mistake in entering the amount to the credit of another lambardar. In the lower Court a reference was made to rule 13 of the Board of Revenue Circular 1-III reprinted by Dr. Agaarwala on p. 347 of his Land Revenue Act, 6th edition, which says that, though it is the duty of the co-sharers to pay through the lambardar, any payment made direct into the treasury by a co-sharer shall be credited to the account of the lambardar and be deemed to have been made through him. The learned Additional Judge rightly held that this rule does not affect the case. It is primarily a direction to the Revenue Officials and any rules made under the Act must under section 234 be consistent with the Act and cannot in any way affect the duty of a co-sharer to pay through the lambardar as provided by section 144.

The money having been paid into the tahsil twice over, the question is who is to suffer, the plaintiff, who complied with the law in every respect, or the defendant, who made the payments irregularly contrary to section 144 did not inform the lambardar and give incorrect information to the tahsil officials, which may have been partly responsible for their error in crediting the amounts. Under these circumstances there can be no question that if any one has to suffer it must be the defendant. The plaintiff has paid in good faith and in accordance with law the money due from him on account of the defendant's share, and he is entitled to recover it under section 159. I must, therefore, and hereby do, dismiss the appeal with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

At the same time I see no reason why it should not be within the power of the Revenue Officials to repay to the defendant the excess payment made by her. It is purely due to the mistake of the tahsil officials that the money has been credited to a wrong khata. I direct that a copy of this judgment be sent to the Collector with a recommendation that steps should be taken to give the defendant a refund of the money paid by her which had already been paid on her account by the lambardar.

JUDGMENT.

Chakravarti, J.—This is an appeal by the defendants and arises out of a suit brought by the plaintiffs for a declaration that the two decrees obtained by the common manager of the estate of the defendants were obtained by fraud and that the decrees were void and ineffectual as against the plaintiffs. The Munsif dismissed the suit in its entirety but the lower Appellate Court has made a modified decree in favour of the plaintiffs. The facts shortly stated are as follows: The defendants' estate was represented by a common manager who brought a suit against the plaintiffs in the year 1914. The suit was decreed on the 17th July 1915. An appeal to the first lower Appellate Court was dismissed on the 21st March 1916 and the judgment of the first Court was confirmed. A second appeal against that decree by the present plaintiffs was disposed of on the 10th March 1919. But it appears that the other suit to which the plaintiffs' claim relates was brought in the year 1917 and the present plaintiffs contested that suit. Ultimately the defendants gave up their defence and there was an ex parte decree in favour of the common manager. The decree was made on the 25th May 1918. But it appears that the common manager was discharged on the 24th July 1917. The contention of the plaintiffs was that, so far as the first suit was concerned, the decision of the High Court was after the common manager had been discharged. So far as the second suit was concerned, the decree by the first Court was passed after the discharge of the common manager. The present plaintiffs wanted, as we have stated before, a declaration that both the decrees were not binding on them because the common manager had been discharged before the decrees. The Court of first instance found that the fraud alleged in respect of the said decrees was not established and it further held that the remedies claimed by this suit were not available by a separate suit. The lower Appellate Court on appeal by the plaintiffs, agreed with the first Court, so far as the question of fraud was concerned; but it gave a declaration to the plaintiffs so far as the decree in the second appeal in the first suit was concerned and also as regards the decree of the first Court in the second suit, on the ground that the manager had been dismissed before those dates. Against that part of the decree which was made in favour of the plaintiffs, the defendants have preferred this second appeal and it is contended on their behalf by the learned Vakil who appears for them that the suit, for the purpose of the reliefs, which were granted by the lower Appellate Court, was not maintainable by the plaintiffs. We think that this contention is correct. So far as the first suit is concerned the lower Appellate Court pointed out that the decree in the first Court and in the lower Appellate Court was rightly obtained and so far as the second appeal is concerned the present plaintiffs, who were the appellants then, took no steps to get the present defendants brought on the record and allowed the suit to proceed as it was originally brought by the common manager. It is not permissible to a party to a suit to bring a separate suit to obtain the reliefs which were available to him in the previous suit itself or in execution of the decree in that suit. The plaintiffs having failed to prove that there was fraud vitiating the decrees in the previous suits, they are not entitled to question the validity of the decrees and to get a declaration in this suit that those decrees were not binding. We think that such a remedy cannot be obtained by a party to a suit in which the decree was made against him.

The result is that this appeal is dismissed. In the circumstances, we make no order for costs.

Greaves, J.—I agree.

JUDGMENT.—This is the plaintiff's appeal in a suit for possession of 2·98 acres of land and of a one-third grove situate in Barkhera Kalan, Pargana Mohamdi, in the District of Kheri. The defendants are admittedly in possession of the land and the grove in suit. The plaintiff's case is that the property in dispute was granted by their ancestors to Ranjit Singh, Dwarka Singh, Niaranjan Singh and Hem Singh under a compromise dated the 20th September 1886 (Ex. 1) arrived at in a litigation between them in the Court of the Munsif of Kheri; that the 1st survivor, Ranjit Singh, in the array of the grantees died a little over two years before the institution of the suit and that the grantees had merely a life interest which came to an end on the death of the last survivor. The only defence, with which I am concerned at present, was that the compromise conferred an absolute estate. The Court of first instance held that the tenure created by the compromise was only a life estate. In view of this finding the plaintiffs' suit was decreed. On appeal by the defendants the learned Subordinate Judge of Kheri disagreed with the interpretation placed by the Court of first instance on the language of the compromise and came to the conclusion that it conferred an absolute estate. The result was that the appeal was allowed and the plaintiffs' suit dismissed.

I am of opinion that the judgment of the Court below is correct. The Court of first instance rested its decision on the sole ground that the compromise expressly says that the property in suit was granted by way of guzara and cited the case of Raja Rameshar Bakhsh Singh v. Babu Bhagwan Bakhsh Singh (1) in support of it. It is a well settled rule of construction that where the object of a grant is maintenance or Guzara the prima facie import of the grant is that it is for the life of the grantee in spite of the words "for ever" or "in perpetuity". See the judgment of the Privy Council in the case of Rameshar Bakhsh Singh v. Arjun Singh (2). But in the compromise under consideration there is much more than the mere expression of the object of the grant being the maintenance of the grantees. The important part of the compromise bearing on the question under consideration is as follows;—"The plaintiffs will have the "right of sale and mortgage in the first instance in favour of the nearest relatives and in the second instance in the event of their refusal, in favour of other pattidars and that they will have no power of selling it to a stranger". These words are in my judgment sufficiently expressive of the intention to confer an absolute estate. That those words convey the right for alienation is perfectly clear, and the condition that the said right shall be exercised only in favour of a certain class of persons and in favour of no others is a restraint on that right. If this restraint is absolute then it must be held both in law and in equity to be void.

The principle on which this view rests is enacted in section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882). I have therefore to see whether the condition operates as an absolute restraint. In my judgment it does. In Muschamp v Bluet (3), and In re Macleay (4), it was held that a restraint not to alienate except to a certain person was void as being absolute. It was observed in that case that to restrain generally and to restrain from alienating except to one person was the same in effect. In Rosher v. Rosher (5), it was held that the condition that the devisee, in case he wanted to sell, must offer the property to a certain other person, who was at liberty to buy it at a fixed value was held to be in absolute restraint against the power of sale. These cases were applied by Mr. Spankie, A. J. C, to the case of Faiyaz Husain Khan v. Nilkanth (6). In the case decided by Mr. Spankie the condition in restraint of alienation except to B, and his heirs and representatives was held to be in absolute restraint of alienation and void as such. Two more features of the compromise may be noted in support of the conclusion at which the Court below has arrived. The claim of the plaintiffs in the case in which the compromise was made was one for a declaration of proprietary title in a one biswa share of Zamindari and in a grove in the village Barkhera Kalan and one of the conditions of the compromis was that the grantee shall not be liable to pay any rent in excess of the proportionate Government revenue. On these grounds the appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—This judgment will govern First Appeal No. 91 of 1922 preferred by defendants Nos. 9 and 10 Chandrashekhar and Balakram son of Bhagwandin Brahmin and defendant No. 12 Bapuji Sonar, and also First Appeal No. 102 of 1922 filed by Walibhai, defendant No. 11 against Abidalli the plaintiff, Abdul Karim and others defendants respondents. The plaintiff brought the suit out of which these appeals arise, for partition of the joint property against Meharali and other relations who were joined as defendants Nos. 1 to 6 and 16, they being co-owners with himself; the transferees from Meharali and Rahimulla were also joined as co-defendants. Plaintiff asked for a decree for separate possession of his 2 annas share in the joint property. The suit was disposed of by a preliminary decree dated 29th November 1921 passed by Mr. Kolhatkar, Additional District Judge. After the passing of the preliminary decree the defendants Nos. 3 to 6 and 16, who are the other members of the family of Meharali, also requested the Court to effect a partition and to give them separate possession of their own shares. Their request was granted on 19th January 1922 by the Court. Mr. Deshpande was appointed Commissioner for effecting the partition according to the directions contained in the preliminary decree. He submitted two alternative proposals for a general partition to be made on the lines of any one of them. These proposals were submitted by the Commissioner on 5th April, 1922 and 24th July 1922 respectively. The principle adopted in each of them may be stated as under :—

First proposal dated 5th April 1922.

This proposal suggested that separate division of moveables and immoveables providing for a personal decree against defendants Nos. 1 and 2 for the price of moveables admittedly in their possesssion be made.

Second proposal dated 24th July 1922.

This proposal was for dividing moveable and immoveable property in one lot as a whole according to the valuations set out by the judgment and the preliminary decree.

The Judge after hearing the objections, held that the second proposal of dividing moveables and immoveables together in one lot as a whole according to the valuation set out in the decree was more fair and correct, and ordered a final decree to be drawn up in terms of the same. It is against this final decree dated 31st July 1922 that these appeals have been preferred by the transferees.

In the preliminary decree as also in the patties made by the Commissioner the several items of property are marked as A. B. C. D. and so on. The items in dispute in these two appeals are referred to in the grounds of appeal by an alphabetical enumeration on the same lines. The grievance in the appeal of defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 12—First Appeal No. 91 of 1922—is as regards property P, allotted to plaintiff in lieu of compensation for damage to property F and also as regards property N, allotted to defendants Nos. 3 to 5 in lieu of similar compensation for damage to property I. Similarly the grievance in defendant No. 11's First Appeal No. 102 of 1922 —is as regards property O, allotted to defendants Nos. 6 and 16 as a part of their substantive share. It will thus be seen that the dispute which requires consideration in these two appeals is confined to items N, O, P. It may be useful to know at a glance what the properties N, O, P and F and I are and so I reproduce their description as given in the preliminary and final decrees : —

F is a bungalow worth Rs. 6,000 allotted to plaintiff's share (item 1V of patti I).

I is a stone building, a Chawl of 20 rooms worth about Rs. 1,2000 allotted to the share of defendants Nos. 3 to 9 (item No. I of patti No. III).

N is a house sold by Meharali defendant No. 1 to appellants Chandrashekhar and Balakram, worth about Rs. 2,000 now allotted to defendants Nos. 3 to 5 as compensation for damage to property I.

O is a house sold by Meharali to appellant Walibhai worth about Rs. 1,500 now allotted to the share of defendants Nos. 6 and 16 (item No. IV patti No. II) as a part of their substantive share.

P is a house similarly sold to appellant Bapuji worth about Rs. 1,000 now allotted to plaintiff as compensation for damage to property F.

It will thus be seen that both these appeals dispute the propriety of allotting property alienated in favour of strangers to the share of the other co-owners instead of to the share of the alienor or alienors and the appeal of defendants Nos. 9, 10 and 12 raises the further question as to how far they are liable to make good, the loss that may be due to the neglect of the alienor's legal representative to take proper care of the estate left in his possession after the date of the alienation ; in other words whether they are responsible to contribute to the costs of repairs to the bungalow F and the Chawl I.

I will take up the second question first. As regards this question, namely, of awarding compensation to the plaintiff and to defendants Nos. 3 to 5 for damage to properties F and I, I must state for the sake of clearness that the question was raised for the first time at a very late stage, viz., on 27th February 1922, while the proposals for partition were being discussed by the Commissioner. The plaintiff urged then that properties F and I were damaged after institution of the suit and that the cost of repairing these damages should be awarded and considered while allotting the shares. Plaintiff claimed that Rs. 2,000 for repairs to the bungalow F and Rs. 2,000 for repairs to Chawl I should be fixed as compensation. Statements were recorded on this point on 27th February 1922 wherein the transferees objected to the matter being enquired into by the Commissioner. Plaintiff also made an application on similar lines to the Court of the Additional District Judge for issue of instructions to the Commissioner to take up the question. The Court by an order dated 28th February 1922 endorsed on the petition itself (passed apparently without notice to or hearing other parties, for there is no reference to the petition in the Court's own order-sheet directed the Commissioner to take up the question. In the statements recorded on 27th February 1922 I do not find any claim being put forward by or on behalf of defendants Nos. 3 to 5 for damages. The question was enquired into and the Commissioner after taking evidence adduced by the parties and making a local inspection of the bungalow and the chawl on 24th March 1922, and examining a sub-overseer of the Wardha District Council as a Court witness, reported that Rs. 2,000 would be a proper and reasonable amount to be awarded as cost of repairing the Chawl and Rs. 1,000 as costs of repairs to the bungalow. The opinion of the Commissioner as regards the person responsible for these damages, was that defendant No. 2 had intentionally neglected these properties and allowed them to be damaged, and also failed to make the necessary repairs since the date of the suit.

The suit was instituted as far back on 20th September 1918 and the report of the Commissioner is dated 29th March 1922. From the evidence recorded by the Commissioner it seems he inferred, and I think very rightly, that the defendant No. 2 had joined hands with the plaintiff. The appellants contend that this amounts to collusion. I am not prepared to go to the length of holding that they colluded with a view to defraud the appellants. But this does not mean that defendant No. 2 was acting fairly towards the transferees. His admissions in the witness-box do show that he wanted to advance the case of the plaintiff on the point of compensation. The plaintiff's statement dated 27th February 1922 attributed the damage to the neglect of defendant No. 2, and his deposition as P.W. 1 before the Commissioner also shows that he asserted that the damage was due to the deliberate negligent management of defendant No. 2. He says that it commenced from the date of the suit, but this does not appear to be correct. As pointed out by the Court in its endorsement dated 28th Febuary 1922 on the petition, defendant No. 1, Abdul Karim as II D. W. 4 had stated that the bungalow and the stone chawl were in good condition and no portion of the same was destroyed when he left Wardha in 1920. (See his deposition dated 28th June 1921 page 139 of the record). The damage must have been subsequent to 1920. At what time the damage was caused is not also proved satisfactorily. Assuming it was caused between 1918 and 1920 the question is was it not possible for the plaintiff to prevent it by taking proper steps in time. He did nothing in 1918-1920. It was as well the duty of plaintiff, who was cognisant of this fact and says he saw the damaged condition almost every day, to take some steps in time to prevent damage or to restrain the defendant No. 2 against causing any further damage or loss to the buildings. He is forced to admit that he did not bring this fact to the notice of the Court till the date of his application made on 27th April 1922. He no doubt adds that he made a petition to the Court for the appointment of a Receiver. But that too was so late as 12th April 1921. Notices of the petition were ordered to be given to the defendants and it was to be heard at the hearing fixed for evidence, which fell on 18th, 19th and 25th July. Notices were not served on the defendants and the plaintiff thought fit to voluntarily withdraw the petition on 25th July 1921, the case being closed for argument that day. There is thus negligence on the part of plaintiff as well. Defendants Nos. 3 to 5 have neither cared to make any complaint in respect of the damage nor did they support the plaintiff's demand. They seem to have been quite indifferent in this matter. Nothing has been brought to my notice from the record to show that defendant No. 2 was charged with any special duty to look after the estate by arrangement between the parties or by any order of the Court imposing upon him any special obligation like those of manager to take care of the property. As one of the persons entitled to possession as a co-owner he owed the same duty and was under the same obligation of preservation of self-interest as any other co-owner like the plaintiff and the two sets of defendants Nos. 3 to 5 and defendants Nos. 6 and 16 was or were. The evidence on record falls short of proving that the neglect on defendant No. 2's part was deliberate or wilful or culpable. It is not shown that defendant No. 2 was possessed or put in possession of sufficient funds to enable him to execute the necessary repairs. Thus though I hold that there was negligence I am not prepared to hold that it was on defendant No. 2's part alone. There was negligence all round on the part of the plaintiff, defendant Nos. 1 and 2 and 3 to 5, and 6 and 16 i.e., of all persons interested as co-sharers in the properties F and I, held by them.

The transferees, who are appellants before me, had no concern with or control over those items of properties, nor has it been alleged or shown that they had influenced the defendant No. 2 to commit the alleged acts of waste or mismanagement in respect thereto in order to cause loss to the claimants. They have not been shown to have contributed to the neglect on the part of defendant No. 2. The defendants Nos. 9, 10, 11 and 12 cannot, therefore, be made responsible for any acts of mismanagement or waste or for damage caused by the defendant No. 2's neglectful dealing with the property. It is simply absurd to make the transferees suffer for the negligence or misdeeds of their transferor or his legal representative, not of a date prior to their transfer but subsequent to the date of the alienations in their favour ; mush less could they be held answerable for acts of waste done by the legal representative, or for his omission to do the necessary repairs, after the date of the institution of suit for partition. It would be very inequitable and unjust to impose upon an innocent party an obligation to pay compensation for meeting the cost of repairs occasioned either by the neglect of another party to do the necessary repairs in time. or by the wilful waste committed by such negligent party. The allotment of properties P and N purchased and improved since the purchase by the appellants in First Appeal No. 91 of 1922, by way of compensation to the shares of plaintiff and defendants Nos. 3 to 5 is thus wholly unjust and inequitable and cannot be supported on any principle of law.

Section 44 of the Transfer of Property Act says that a transferee from one co-owner acquires as to the share or interests acquired and so far as is necessary to give effect to the transfer, the transferror's right, but that it is "subject to the conditions and liabilities affecting, at the date of the transfer, the share or interest so transferred." The word 'at the date of the transfer' in the clause "subject to the conditions and liabilities, at the date of the share of interest so transferred" are very important. The negative the claim of the other co-owners to impose on the share or interest transferred any conditions or liabilities, not affecting it (i. e., not existing) at the date of the transfer. They cannot saddle any new conditions or liabilities, which come into existence after the date of the alienation and bind the alienees by them.

In First Appeal No. 35 of 1906 Drake-Brockman, J. C., in dealing with the question of the propriety of debiting time-barred debts to the share of the managing partner by whose neglect their recovery by suit had become time-barred, held that the loss occasioned to the partnership by neglect of any one co-owner or partner could not be debited to his share, because it was equally within the power of and open to the other co-owners to be vigilant and to take steps to prevent the loss. In support of this view he relied upon and quoted with approval certain passages from Lindley on Partnership 7th edition, pages 416 and 417 which correspond to pages 441 and 445 of the 8th edition which I reproduce here: The general principle, however, that partners must contribute rateably to their shares towards the losses and debts of the firm is not open to question . . . (p. 444). Even if a loss sustained by a firm is imputable to the conduct of one partner more than to that of another, still, if the former acted bona fide with a view to the benefit of the firm and without culpable negligence, the loss must be borne equally by all (p. 445). In Cragg v. Ford (1), whereupon a partnership being dissolved the defendant on whom the winding up of its affairs delayed selling certain assets though the plaintiff had requested an immediate sale thereof, and the delay in sale fetched a much lower price, the plaintiff's contention that the loss sustained by the postponement of the sale ought to be borne by the defendant alone, was overruled, it was held that the plaintiff if he had chosen, might himself have sold the same and that as the defendant in delaying the sale had acted bona fide and in the exercise of his discretion, the loss ought not to be thrown on him alone but ought to be shared by the plaintiff.

The learned J. C. remarked upon the facts of the case before him as follows : —

" The plaintiff had access to the accounts and they could have ascertained the condition of the debtors and moved the Court to arrange for suits being filed."

One has only to substitute the words ' property " bungalow ' and ' Chawl ' and ' repairs being made' respectively for the words ' accounts' ' debtors ' and ' suits being filed' for making these remarks applicable to this case. I think, the judgment of the Court below upholding the Commissioner's allotment of properties P and N by way of compensation for meeting the cost of repairs to properties F and I assigned to the shares of plaintiff and defendants Nos. 3 to 5 respectively cannot stand because it would be debiting the loss to the share of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 alone though the same was debitable to the shares of all.

It is well settled that as a rule negligence is not to be presumed ; it is rather to be presumed that ordinary care has been used. Even in cases of accident this rule of presuming negligence, which is commonly expressed by the phrase res ipsa loquitur is not of invariable applicability. Bramwell, B., said in Byrne v. Boadle (2) " No doubt in every case where such an occurrence (accidental falling of a barrel of flour from an upper window upon a man walking in the street in front of a flour dealer's premises) as this causing injury happens the presumption of negligence is not raised but in some it is. We must judge of the fact in a reasonable way, and in that light we know that injuries do not happen without a cause, and that generally that cause is negligence." There is an obvious distinction between the injuries caused by such an event as that which happened in Byrne v. Boadle (2), and a loss caused by failure to recover a debt within a given time or to execute repairs at the proper time. As held above the negligence was not wilful or culpable on the part of defendant No. 2 ; nor could it be attributable to a breach of duty on the part of defendant No. 2 alone, any more than on the part of the other co-owners or partners. Moreover the loss occasioned by the negligence appears to have not been objected to at the proper time. Under these circumstances the loss must fall on all and must be shared by all in proportion to their respective shares. The aggregate value of the assets must, therefore, stand reduced to the extent of Rs. 3,000 ,which is found to be the estimated cost of putting the properties F and I in a fit state of repairs. The loss would thus be distributed with reference to the main shares as follows :—

Plaintiff's 2 annas share	Rs. 375
Defendants Nos. 1 & 2's 4 annas share	Rs. 750
Defendants Nos. 3 to 5's 4 annas share	Rs. 750
Defendants Nos. 5&16's 6 annas share	Rs. 1,125
	Rs. 3,000

The appellants-defendants Nos. 9, 10, 11 and 12 must also suffer their own proportionate share of the loss of Rs. 750 shown above as falling to the 4 annas share of defendants Nos. 1 and 2. This disposes of the second objection, which prevails.

I will now consider the first objection, namely, the common question involved in both the appeals regarding the propriety or otherwise of alloting properties P. N. and O. to the share of defendants Nos. 1 and 2 in order that the alienees may as far as possible be left to enjoy the properties purchased by them free from the claims of other co-owners. I may at once remark that both the Commissioner as also the Court have gone wrong and have contravened the instructions contained in paras. 3 and 4 of the preliminary decree which runs as follows :—

3. The said Commissioner will exclude as far as possible the property transferred by Meharali and Rahimtullah to defendants Nos. 7 and 8 and the property transferred by Meharali to defendants Nos. 9. 10,11 and 12 from the share of the plaintiff provided that such exclusion does not operate to the prejudice of the plaintiff,

(2) (1863) 33 L. J. Ex. 13 at p 15 ; 2 H. & C. 722; 9 L. T. (N. S.) 450 ; 12 W. R. 279 ; 133 R. R. 761 ; 159 E. R. 299.

The property so transferred is mentioned in Schedules Nos. 5 and 16 hereto annexed.

4. That if the said Commissioner finds that partition cannot be made according to the instructions in para. 3 without destroying the intrinsic value of the property, he shall report the amount of compensation to be made by defendants Nos. 1 to 5 for equality of partition.

The benefit of these instructions for the preservation of the rights of the alienees has been made available even as against defendants Nos. 3 to 5 and defendants Nos. 6 and 16 by the amendment of the decree made at the instance of the aforesaid defendants. At the very outset I cannot help remarking that the demand of the plaintiff and that of his co-sharers (defendants Nos. 3 to 5 and 6 and 16) that only immoveable property should be assigned to his or their shares is simply preposterous and sounds so very unjust and absurd that I am surprised to find that it was so readily acceded to in the Court below. I am not satisfied that there will be any "prejudice" to the plaintiff or to other claimants in carrying out the instructions contained in para. 3 of the decree; nor can it be said that the "partition cannot be made according to the aforesaid instructions without destroying the intrinsic value of the property." The instructions are meant as an enabling and not a disenabling provision; they could not be interpreted as laying down any prohibition much less an absolute prohibition against allotting the properties transferred for valuable consideration to the share of the transferrors. The appellants being transferees for valuable consideration have strong equities in their favours which it is the duty of the Court to respect, as far as possible, since they entitle them under law to ask the Court to so marshal the various properties between the several sharers as to allocate the particular properties purchased by them to their alienor's share in order that their possession over the same may not be disturbed. There is overwelming authority of law to support this position. It is needless to state that the insertion of the instructions in paras. 3 and 4 of the decree was because of the existence of such authority and for giving effect to it if possible while distributing. It is thus neither just nor equitable to uphold the allotment or properties P, N and O in the manner made by the Court. I cannot similarly uphold the allotment of property O purchased by defendant No. 11 to the share of defendants Nos. 6 and 16.

As the appeals succeed the decree appealed against requires to be modified so as to bring it into conformity with this judgment. As this will involve a readjustment of the assets I invite the parties to look up this preliminary judgment and submit their respective proposals for my consideration within 20 days from this day. If the parties or any of them fail to make their suggestions within the time hereby limited I will proceed to make the readjustment or re-allotment in such manner as may appear to me just and reasonable in the circumstances of the case. I will then draw up my final judgment and a decree will follow in each of these appeals with necessary orders for costs.

The doctrine of "relieving against penalty" applies to decrees. [p. 926, col. 1.]

As the adoption of a contract by a Court amounts to an adoption by it with all its legal incidents, the considerations, which would arise if a mere contract were in question, would equally apply to the enforcement of a decree embodying the contract. A Court is, therefore, entitled to relieve against a penalty on breach of a condition in a compromise decree containing the contract between parties. [p. 926, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—Both the lower Courts have treated the sum payable under the decree on a breach of the condition, in the nature of a penalty and relying upon Sheikh Mohidin Tharagan v. Vadivalagianambia Pillai (1), have dismissed the plaintiff's application.

The question to be decided is: Is the doctrine of relieving against penalty to be applied to decrees? In Nagappa v. Venkat Rao (2), it has been held that the adoption of a contract by a Court amounts to an adoption of it with all its legal incidents and that the considerations which would arise if a mere contract were in question would equally apply to the enforcement of a decree embodying the contract. As the court would have relieved the defendant from the penalty if the question had arisen in respect of a mere contract, it was likewise justified in relieving him from the penalty in the compromise decree containing the contract between the parties. The order, therefore, of the lower Court is correct and this appeal is dismissed, but in the circumstances without costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 50, 115—"Thereafter," Meaning of in s. 115—Record of rights published—Presumption under s. 50.

The word "thereafter" in section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act refers to a period subsequent to the publication of the record of rights, but what is provided is that the presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter, that is to say after the particulars mentioned in section 102 have been recorded, apply. [p. 927, col. 2.]

Once the record of rights has been finally recorded as provided in section 115 of the Act, then the presumption under section 50 is no longer open to the tenants whether they are relying upon a payment of rent at a uniform rate either before or after the publication of the record of rights. JUDGMENT.

Miller, C. J.—These appeals arise out of suits instituted by the landlord the proprietor of mouza Dhanaut against a number of his tenants claiming enhancement of rent under section 30 of the Bengal Tenancy Act.

The learned Munsif after hearing the evidence arrived at the conclusion that the landlord was entitled to enhancement at the rate of 2 annas in the rupee.

The tenants appealed from this decision and the landlord filed a cross-appeal claiming that the rate of enhancement ought to be more than the 2 annas found by the Munsif. The learned Subordinate Judge dismissed the appeal of the tenants and allowed the appeal of the landlord. He found by calculation under section 32 of the Bengal Tenancy Act that the rate at which the enhancement should be allowed worked out at 3 annas 8 pies in the rupee and that the Munsif had taken too lenient a view of the case in favour of the defendants by reducing it to 2 annas. He considered that the Court had no option; that it could not reduce the enhancement which was found by calculation under section 32 to be the proper rate of enhancement. He considered, therefore, that the plaintiff was entitled to the full enhancement worked out in accordance with that section but as he had only claimed 3 annas 6 pies he decreed enhancement at that rate.

From this decision the tenants have appealed. It would appear that they called evidence to shew that they had been in occupation of their holdings for a period of 20 years before the suit paying rent at the same rate. They further contended that they were not liable to enhancement at all as they were tenants at fixed rates. In support of this contention they prayed in aid the provisions of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. The learned Subordinate Judge, however, considered that that section in the circumstances of the case had no application, because the Record-of-Rights had been finally published and recorded within the meaning of section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act and that the presumption arising under section 50 no longer existed after final publication of the Record-of-Rights. It has been argued on behalf of the appellants before us that section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act applies only in bar of the tenants' right to rely upon the presumption under section 50 in so far as they rely upon occupancy for 20 years after the publication of the Record-of-Rights and that if they can shew that they have been in occupation paying the same rent for 20 years before the publication of the Record-of-Rights then section 115 has no operation. According to what I should consider to be the ordinary and natural interpretation of section 115 the presumption under section 50 ceases to apply in all cases except in so far as the Act may otherwise determine once the particulars mentioned in section 102, clause (b) have been recorded under Chapter X. In support of their contention the appellants rely upon a case decided in the year 1908 in the Calcutta High Court by Mr. Justice Doss, Maharaja Radha Kishore Manikya Bahadur v. Umed Ali.(1) In that case the landlord brought a suit for enhancement of rent. It was held that notwithstanding the provisions of section 115 of the Act the tenant was entitled upon proof of uniform payment of rent for 20 years before the Record of-Rights was framed to the benefit of the presumption arising under sub-section (2) of clause 50. The learned Judge considered that the word "thereafter" in section 115 referred to a period subsequent to the publication of the Record-of-Rights. There can be no doubt, in my mind, that the word "thereafter" does refer to a period subsequent to the publication of the Record of-Rights, but what is provided is that the presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter, that is to say after the particulars mentioned in section 102 have been recorded, apply. This decision so far as I am aware has not received any support in other cases. It was referred to in a latter case of the Calcutta High Court in Parthichand Lal Chowdhry v. Basarat Lal (2) and on that occasion a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court expressed the view that the wording of section 115 was plain enough and might without anything else lead to the conclusion that as soon as a final record is framed under section 103-A clause (2) the particulars mentioned in section 102 clause (b) should be taken to have been recorded and the presumption under section 50 should cease to apply thereafter to that tenancy. The question, however, in that case was whether the presumption arising under section 50 was still available to the tenant in proceedings under section 105 although the Record-of-Rights had been finally published. Their Lordships considered the history of the matter and pointed out that from 1885 up to the year 1898 the tenant always had the benefit of the presumption under section 50 in all proceedings under sections 105 and 106 and they did not think that section 115 was intended to take away that benefit. They regarded proceedings under section 105 as proceedings which would have to be recorded eventually and when a decision was given under that section the Record-of-Rights might be amended and was always liable to amendment until proceedings under that section had come to an end. That case, however, is no authority in support of the plaintiff's contention in the present case. Indeed in so far as this Court is concerned the matter has been considered on more than one occasion. At least four cases have been drawn to our attention which are to the same effect. I need only refer to two of them. In Maharaja Bahadur Kesho Prasad Singh v. Ramjas Pande (3), it was decided by a Division Bench of this Court that after the the publication of the Record-of-Rights the tenants are not in view of section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act entitled to the benefit of the presumption which arises under section 50, clause (2) and, therefore, in order to establish that they are entitled to their holdings on payment of a fixed rent in perpetuity they must prove by evidence that they have held the land at a rate of rent which has not been changed since the time of the Permanent Settlement. Incidentally they found that production of rent receipts shewing payment at a uniform rate for 33 years was not sufficient to prove that the rate of rent had not changed since the date of the Permanent Settlement. Again in the case of Gobind Lal Sijuar v. Ram Sahu (4), it was decided that under section 115 of the Act a tenant cannot rely upon the presumption under section 50, clause (2) after the final publication of the Record-of-Rights except in a suit instituted under section 106 challenging the entry itself within three months from the date of final publication. These cases and others which it is unnecessary to refer to seem to shew that there has been a uniform course of decisions in this Court which lay down the view that once the Record-of-Rights has been finally recorded as provided in section 115 then the presumption under section 50 is no longer open to the tenants whether they are relying upon a payment of rent at a uniform rate either before or after the publication of the Record-of-Rights. In my opinion this point must be decided against the appellants.

The only other question which was raised was that the learned Judge in arriving at the rate of enhancement had not stated any particulars or figures shewing how he arrived at it. What he does say is that by calculation under section 32 of the Act the rate at which the enhancement should be allowed is found to be 3 annas 8 pies. It is contended that this is not sufficient and that not having given his figures or his methods of calculation the appellants are not in a position to criticise the manner in which he arrived at his figure of 3 annas 8 pies. The appellants, however, had at their disposal full information as to the rates which were taken into consideration in arriving at that figure and if they were prepared to shew that the result of the learned Judge's calculation was wrong in any particular we certainly should have heard their argument about it. The learned Vakil for the appellants, however, is unable to shew us in what particular he could satisfy the Court, if we remanded this case, that the learned Judge had arrived at a wrong result. In the circumstances it seems to me that we should not be justified in sending back this case for further hearing merely because the learned Judge has not set out in detail the figures by which he arrived at his result. In second appeal we will never send back a case for further consideration merely because it is suggested that if the matter went back some different result might possibly be arrived at. It has not been pointed out to us at all in what particulars these figures are wrong. In my opinion these appeals must be dismissed with costs.

Specific Relief Act (I of 1877), s. 42—Receiver in possession of properties under s. 146, Criminal Procedure Code—Suit to establish title—Consequential relief for possession, whether necessary—Hindu Law—Partition among minors—Legality.

Where a magistrate by his order under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code placed the properties, the subject of dispute, in the possession of a Receiver, that Receiver must be taken to be in possession on behalf of the persons properly entitled to the properties [p. 929, col. 2.]

Therefore, a plaintiff suing to establish a title in such a case, need not seek any consequential relief by way of recovery of possession. It is sufficient for him to sue for mere declaration of title. [p. 930, col. 1.]

Mr. A. Krishnaswami Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs sue for a declaration that they are entitled to the properties in the plaint A and B Schedules and the value of C schedule properties. There was a dispute likely to lead to a breach of the peace with reference to these properties between the plaintiffs and the defendants and the matter was taken up by the Magistrate under section 145 of the Code of Criminal Procedure. The Magistrate's order, which was read to me shows that, finding himself unable to say which party was in possession of the properties, he directed the properties to be attached under section 146, Criminal Procedure Code and placed them in the possession of a Receiver pending a decision of the Civil Court in favour of one or other of the parties. It is as a result of that order that this suit has been brought by the plaintiffs for an adjudication as stated above that they are the persons entitled to the properties.

It is objected in Second Appeal in limine that the suit as brought is not maintainable, the plaintiffs ought to have sued for possession of the properties as well and that they are not entitled to ask for a mere declaration under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. On the authorities I do not think that this contention can be supported.

The Magistrate, by his order, has placed the properties in the possession of the Receiver and that Receiver must be taken to be in possession on behalf of the persons properly entitled to the properties. If the plaintiffs can establish their title, then the possession of the Receiver would be on their behalf and they need not seek any further relief for recovering possession from the Receiver. This has been laid down in the authority cited by the learned Subordinate Judge, The Administrator-General of Bengal v. Bhagban Chandra Ray Choudhuri, (1). This position is also supported by the ruling in Rajah of Venkatagiri v. Isakapalli Subbiah (2) where the possession of a Receiver was held to be the possession of the rightful party. Again in Vedanayaga Mudaliar v. Vedammal (3), it was ruled, in circumstances similar to this, that, where a Receiver is in possession it is not necessary to sue for consequential relief by way of recovery of possession, but that it was sufficient to sue for a mere declaration.

(2) 26 M. 410.
(3) 27 M. 591.

The learned Vakil for the appellant has tried to raise a special point in this case on the ground that at the time when the Magistrate ordered the attachment of the properties, the properties were not in the possession of the plaintiffs but were apparently lying fallow and uncultivated, the possession of the properties being in dispute. That can make no difference at all, on the point of law. As the Receiver was appointed by the Magistrate to take possession of the properties, he must thereafter be taken to be in possession, and, if his possession is that of a rightful owner, then the plaintiffs have only to establish that they are the rightful owners, and no further reliefs need be claimed by them. The first objection, therefore, fails and must be rejected.

One point taken on the merits is that, in this case, the alleged partition between the deceased brother of the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 1 to 3 was not a valid partition at all, because at the time of partition all the coparceners were minors. The alleged partition was a partition where the mothers of these various minors were acting as their guardians. As the learned District Judge says, there is no rule that minors cannot divide their properties among themselves when they are properly represented by guardians in the transaction. No case has been brought to my notice where all the coparceners were minors, but it has been laid down that the fact that some of the coparceners are minors will not prevent a partition from being valid, if no advantage is taken of their minority to their loss see the Privy Council decision in Balkishen Das v. Ram Narain Sahu (4).

At page 752 their Lordships observe :—

"The question upon which their Lordships have felt most difficulty is whether the document can be considered as binding on the coparceners, who were minors at the date of it. But they think that in these proceedings they must treat it as binding upon them. There is no doubt that a valid agreement for partition may be made during the minority of one or more of the coparceners. That seems to follow from the admitted right of one coparcener to claim a partition and if an agreement for partition could not be made binding on minors, a partition could hardly ever take place. No doubt if the partition was unfair or prejudicial to the minor's interests, he might, on attaining his majority by proper proceedings set it aside, so far as regards himself."

Now, in this case the minors all became majors long previously, about 8 or 10 years ago. No steps have been taken by any of them to set aside the partition at all, and, as pointed out by the learned District Judge, they have acted upon the partition and treated it as good by dealing with their respective shares as each liked by executing sale deeds in respect of them—See Exs. E and E (1). Ex. E, is a sale-deed executed by the 1st defendant himself, who is the sole appellant before me. The learned Judge has also considered whether there was anything to show that the division was unusual or unfair, and has held that there is nothing to show it. In fact it is not alleged that the partition has been either unusual or unfair, and the fact that the parties are standing by it and acquiescing in it is a strong circumstance against the partition being in any way unfair.

In these circumstances, I am not prepared to differ from the learned District Judge who held that this partition was a good partition. It is true that the partition is not evidenced by any document, but the evidence in the case is sufficient to support the finding that there was a partition between Varadarajulu Naidu and defendants Nos. 1 to 3, before the former's death.

That being so, his will, Ex. F, under which his mother Kanniammal got the property is a valid will, and if she was entitled to the properties, plaintiffs must now be held to be entitled to those properties after her death. It was no doubt stated in the written statement that the will was not true in fact when the defendants took objection to its validity as well, but, in the issues, I find no question raised as to the factum of the will. There is nothing before me to show that the defendants insisted upon their plea in their written statement that the will was not genuine being tried. Issues are framed not only with reference to written statements but also with reference to statements made at the time when they are framed. The fact that the will is a registered will may very likely, as stated by the learned Vakil for the respondent, have led to the defendants giving up their plea as to the factum of the will. There is no substance in the plea now urged that I should raise an issue for the first time as to the factum of the will and call for a finding thereon. If there was anything wrong with the issues framed, it was for defendants then and there to have applied to the Trial Court to amend the issues and put them right ; nothing of that sort was done.

On the evidence I must hold that the decision of the District Judge is correct. The Second Appeal fails and is dismissed with costs.

Rule in the matter of Mis. Appeal No. 266 of 1923, of the Court of the District Judge, Backergunge at Barisal, (Mis. Case No. 23 of 1923, arising out of the Rent Execution Case No. 25 of 1922, of the Sub-Judge, 2nd Court, Backergunge at Barisal).

Babu Jogesh Chandra Roy (with him Babu Birbhusan Dutt), for the Opposite Party.

JUDGMENT.—This Rule is issued against an order of the District Judge of Barisal reversing an order of the Subordinate Judge of that place setting aside a sale under O. XXI, r. 90, Civil Procedure Code. The learned Subordinate Judge had held that there were suppression of sale processes and other material irregularities and set aside the sale accordingly. The learned District Judge on appeal proceeded upon one single point, namely, the absence of proof of service of notice on the decree-holder. It may be remarked that in this case the decree-holder was the auction-purchaser. The learned District Judge has found that there was no proof of service of notice of the application on the decree-holder which is necessary to entitle a Court to pass an order under r. 90 and in this view of the matter dismissed the petitioner's application for setting aside the sale. This rule was obtained on the ground that the view taken by the Court below was wrong and that he had no jurisdiction to dismiss the petitioner's application for setting aside the sale only on the ground that no notice was served on the decree-holder auction-purchaser. In our judgment there is a great deal of force in this contention. Order XXI, r. 92 no doubt lays down that no order should be made unless notice of the application has been given to all persons affected thereby. The object of this enactment is to give notice of the application to all parties concerned and give them an opportunity of contesting it so that no order may be passed to the prejudice of any party behind his back. This object will equally be achieved if the party has otherwise notice of the application. Rules of Procedure are not made for the purpose of hindering justice, Indrajit Pratap Bahadur Sahi v. Amar Singh (1). If a party to a sale had notice of the application, it would not ordinarily seem necessary that a mere formality should be observed in order to comply with the requirements of the law. This provision is intended more to safeguard the interest of strangers like a stranger auction-purchaser. A view similar to this was taken in the case of Santosh Bala Debi v. Ram Chandra Ghate (2). We, therefore, think that the order passed by the learned Judge cannot be supported and must be set aside. The case will, therefore, go back to him for an enquiry as to whether the decree-holder had really any notice of this application or not. It appears from the record of the first Court that the sale took place on the 10th February in which the decree-holder became the purchaser. The 12th March was fixed for confirmation of sale. On the 10th March this application was made and it was ordered to be put up on the 7th April for hearing and both parties were directed to appear on that date. On the 12th March it was ordered that the execution case be put along with the miscellaneous case. This order may lead one to presume that the decree-holder had notice of the application. Whether he had or not should be determined on proper enquiry and in the present case the petitioner had no opportunity of proving that the decree-holder had notice of the application. The case will, therefore, go back to the learned Judge for enquiry as to whether the decree-holder had any notice of this application; and, if he holds he had he will hear the appeal on the merits.

Costs will abide the result. We assess the hearing-fee at one gold mohur.

RADHA LAL v. MULCHAND

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Chingleput, in Small Cause Suit No. 724 of 1921.

Mr. A. Rama Krishna Aiyer, for the Petitioner.

Mr. S. Muthiah Mudaliar, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.— This Revision petition arises out of a suit on a negotiable promissory-note (dated 24th December 1915) payable on demand by the endoreer of the note against the maker (first defendant) and the endorser (2nd defendant). The Subordinate Judge gave a decree against both the defendants.

The second defendant filed this petition. In his written statement, he raised the question of limitation. The second point for determination stated by the Subordinate Judge is whether the second defendant is liable. I presume that it was intended to include the question of limitation also, though the Subordinate Judge has not discussed it.

The liability of the second defendant arises out of the endorsement and not on the note. The cause of action against him cannot arise earlier than the endorsement (dated 19th March 1918). A payment of one Rupee by the first defendant was endorsed on it and signed by the first defendant on 20th December 1918. This saves limitation as against persons liable on the note and has nothing to do with persons liable on the endorsement. The suit is filed on 20th December 1921. If the cause of action arises before 20th December 1918, the suit is barred by limitation.

The extent and nature of the liability of the endorser of a note payable on demand is not governed by section 35 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. We have to deal with the case of a note payable on demand which has been negotiated by indorsement before it is overdue and has been dishonoured. Sivaramakrishna Pattar v. Moideen Musaliar (1). According to section 86 of the Bills of Exchange Act "Where a note payable on demand has been endorsed, it must be presented for payment within a reasonable time of the endorsement. If it is not presented, the endorser is discharged." The law in India must be, by analogy, (1) to the same effect or (2) subject to a contract to the contrary or (3) the indorser is not liable at all. Taking the most lenient view in favour of the plaintiff, in this case, the note can be regarded as presented for payment only on 20th December 1918 when one Rupee was paid by the first defendant and not earlier. It cannot be said that it was presented within a reasonable time after the endorsement. I do not think it should be in the option of the indorsee by waiting for an unreasonable length of time to postpone the cause of action as he likes. Notice of dishonour is also necessary as a condition precedent to the liability of the second defendant, (section 93) and it also ought to be sent within a reasonable time (see section 94 and sections 105 and 106 of the Negotiable Instruments Act). It is admitted that the notice of the dishonour was given to the second defendant only just before suit. The plaintiff cannot be in a better position than if he presented the note for payment within a reasonable time after indorsement and gave notice of dishonour within a reasonable time after dishonour.

I find the suit is barred by limitation as against the second defendant and I doubt if he is liable at all. The Revision Petition is allowed and the suit is dismissed with costs throughout against the second defendant. The decree against the first defendant will stand.

Messrs. Gulzari Lal and S. S. Sastry, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. Agarwala, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs' suit for partition was dismissed by the first Civil Court on the ground that it was barred by the principle of res judicata. It appears that the plaintiffs, excepting one Lallu, subsequently born, had sued on 8th September 1919, for partition. This suit was compromised and both the parties filed a joint petition on 31st August 1920. It was to the effect : "In the above case the parties entered into a compromise at the remonstrance of a few respectable persons. The parties shall bear their own costs. The plaintiffs withdrew their claim. Hence, the claim should be struck off." (page 43). This petition of compromise was verified by all the parties (page 47). A decree was passed in accordance with this compromise (page 49). This order was: "It is ordered and decreed that according to the compromise this case be struck off. The parties to bear their own costs." The terms of the compromise are not given and the conclusion we draw is that at that particular time the plaintiffs did not desire to press their claim for partition. There was no decision arrived at, that the plaintiffs had no interest in the properties in suit, or that they were not joint holders of the properties with the defendants.

The learned Judge of the lower Court has relied on a Division Bench ruling of this Court. Gulkandi Lal v. Mannu Lal (1). That ruling, however, was not followed in a subsequent case of this Court, T. C. Mukerji v. Afzal Beg (2), which ruling was based on a ruling of this Court Nasrat Ullah v. Mujib Ullah (3), prior in date to the case reported in Gulkandi Lal v. Mannu Lal (1). Subsequent to and prior to the 1914 ruling in the case of T. C. Bannerji a Bench of this Court held in Bishesar Das v. Ram Prasad (4), that where a suit for partition was dismissed for default and a fresh suit instituted, there would be no bar under section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code because the right to enforce partition is a legal incident of a joint tenancy and as long as such tenancy subsists any of the joint tenants may apply to the Court for partition of a joint property. One of the Judges who delivered the judgment in 1906 was one of the two, who delivered judgment in 1901 in the case reported in Gulkandi Lal v. Munnu Lal (1). In 1906 the Calcutta High Court held in Madan Mohan Mondal v. Baikanta Nath Mondal (5) that a fresh suit for partition is not barred by section 13 of the Civil Procedure Code, when a previous suit for partition by the plaintiffs has been compromised. The suit was subsequently dismissed on parties failing to appear during execution proceedings of the preliminary decree passed on compromise. The learned Judge observed at page 840, col. 2 of the Report, following the ruling in Naslrat Ullah v. Mujib Ullah (3) that a suit for declaration of right for partition differs from most other suits in this respect that so long as the property is jointly held a right to partition continues. For these reasons we do not think that the lower Court was corect in following the ruling in the case of Gulkandi Lal.

We set aside the decree of the lower Court and remit the suit to it for trial on the merits. Costs here and here-to-fore shall abide the result, including costs here on the higher scale.

Appeal from a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Jaunpur, dated the 3th July 1922.

Mr. M. S. Bajpai, for the Appellants.

Dr. S. N. Sen and Mr. Haribans Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit which has given rise to this appeal was brought by the plaintiffs appellants for the redemption of three mortgages of different dates and comprising some common and some separate properties. The first mortgage was effected by Sakaldip Singh and Ghazi Mal in favour of Naurang Singh and Ujagar Singh on the 10th of June 1865 and the period fixed for redemption was 8 years. The second mortgage was effected by way of a zaripeshgi lease by Sakaldip Singh, Subh Karan Singh and Prayag Singh on the 19th of February 1869 in favour of the same mortgagees for a period of 10 years. The third mortgage was made by Binda Singh in favour of the same mortgagees on the 31st of March 1870.

On the 26th of July 1869 Sakaldip Singh and Prayag Singh sold their interests in the equity of redemption to Bhawani Din Singh, Thakur Prasad Singh and Dawan Singh and left a portion of the sale consideration for the satisfaction of the first two mortgages. Bhawani Din Singh was the uncle and Takur Prasad Singh was the nephew of the mortgagees. Dawan Singh is said to have been the brother of the wife of Ujagar Singh and it is common ground that his name was fictitiously entered in the sale deed. Whether the vendees paid the money left with them for the satisfaction of the prior mortgages to the prior mortgagees is not clear. On the 17th of June 1872 Binda Singh sold his interest in the equity of redemption to Bhawani Din Singh and Thakur Prasad Singh and left a portion of the sale consideration for the payment of the third mortgage above referred to, but whether the vendees paid the money to the prior mortgagees is not clear.

The plaintiffs claimed to be the legal representatives of Thakur Prasad Singh and as such they sued for the redemption of half the properties sold by the above deeds of sale alleging that the interest of Bhawani Din Singh the owner of the other half of the equity of redemption had passed to Naurang Singh the predecessor-in-title of the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 and that Naurang Singh and the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 had in their capacity as the owners of the other half of the equity of redemption got the mortgaged property redeemed from Ujagar Singh or his heirs to the extent of the interest of Ujagar Singh in the said mortgages. The suit was contested by the defendants Nos. 1 to 5 on various grounds. In order to understand the nature of their defence it will be necessary to refer to the pedigree appended to the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, showing that one Subansa Singh had two sons, Pheran Singh and Dayal Singh. Pheran Singh was the father of Naurang Singh and Ujagar Singh, the mortgagees. Dayal Singh was the father of Bhawani Din Singh, one of the purchasers of the equity of redemption. Thakur Prasad Singh, the other purchaser was the son of Sarabjit Singh, a brother of Naurang Singh and Ujagar Singh. The defendants Nos. 1 to 5 denied that the plaintiffs had any right to sue and pleaded that the name of Ujagar Singh was fictitiously entered in the mortgage deed, that he had never been in possession of the mortgaged property and that the sale deed in favour of Thakur Prasad Singh, Bhawani Din Singh and Dawan Singh was similarly fictitious. Their contention really was that Naurang Singh had taken the mortgages in question with his own funds and had got the name of his brother Ujagar Singh fictitiously entered in the deeds, that the real purchaser of the equity of redemption from the original owners was Naurang Singh himself and that neither Thakur Prasad Singh nor Dawan Singh nor Bhawani Din Singh had paid any portion of the consideration or obtained possession of any portion of the property in dispute. In other words they set up Naurang Singh's exclusive title as a mortgagee and then as a vendee and thereafter by reason of his adverse possession for a period of more than 12 years.

It is admitted in the written statement that there had been a separation in the family of the parties in the time of Pheran Singh and Dayal Singh and that the sons of Pheran Singh had also separated after the death of Pheran Singh, but it is nowhere asserted that the mortgages in question had been obtained by Naurang Singh and Ujagar Singh as members of a joint Hindu family or that the sales aforesaid had been obtained by Thakur Prasad Singh and Bhawani Din Singh for the benefit of the said family in satisfaction of the said mortgages.

The Court of first instance found that the defendants had failed to establish that the name of Ujagar Singh was entered fictitiously in the deeds of mortgage and that the names of Thakur Prasad Singh and Bhawani Din Singh were fictitiously entered in the deeds of sale. It also found that every fact and document were consistent with the theory of the co ownership of Thakur Prasad Singh and Naurang Singh after the disputed sales, and as an explanation for the exclusive possession of Naurang Singh it suggested that the mortgages and sales were taken for the benefit of the joint family comprising the two mortgagees and Thakur Prasad Singh, that the sales had thus the effect of extinguishing the mortgages and that by some arrangement Naurang Singh had became the exclusive possessor of the disputed properties It then proceeded to find that Naurang Singh had been in adverse possession of the properties in question for more than 12 years prior to the suit and that the claim was barred by limitation.

The lower Appellate Court upheld those findings. It pointed out that an attempt was made in 1902 by Naurang Singh to set up his own exclusive title and seek the removal of the name of Thakur Prasad Singh from the revenue papers but without success. It also pointed out that on the death of Thakur Prasad Singh his son Bakha Singh, one of the plaintiffs to the present suit, applied for the entry of his name in place of Thakur Prasad Singh and his application was opposed by Naurang Singh on the same ground and that though the application of Bakha Singh was allowed the name of Naurang Singh continued throughout entered as that of the person in actual possession of the property. From that fact the lower Appellate Court concluded that the exclusive title of Naurang Singh and his heirs by adverse possession for more than 12 years had been established beyond dispute.

In effect the Court below further held that the mortgages in question had ceased to subsist and that no suit for redemption was maintainable.

It is conceded that unless the mortgages were paid or that some other event had happened to put an end to the equity of redemption a suit for redemption would be maintainable; if brought within 60 years from the date when the right to redeem accrues. The contesting defendants did not set up anywhere in the pleadings that the mortgages in question had been redeemed except in so far they alleged that Naurang Singh was really the sole mortgagee and sole purchaser of the equity of redemption. The Courts below, however, found that the entire family owned the mortgages, including the two mortgagees Naurang Singh and Ujagar Singh and that the entire family had purchased the equity of redemption. It is noticeable, however, that one of the mortgagors, namely Ghazi Mal, had not joined in the sales and his interest in the equity of redemption still remains unaffected. It is further noticeable that neither party set up in its pleadings anything suggesting that all the descendants of Pheran Singh, the father of Naurang Singh and Ujagar Singh, were the owners of the mortgagee rights or had purchased the equity of redemption of the persons who had effected the sales. On the other hand one of the purchasers was Bhawani Din Singh, the son of Dayal Singh, who was admitted in the written statement to have been separate from Pheran Singh. The effect of the purchases could not in the circumstances have been to extinguish the mortgages or to vest the rights of the mortgagors in the mortgagees except to a limited extent. The Courts below have dismissed the claim of the plaintiffs on a ground which was not set up in the written statement namely, that the mortgages and the purchases had been made by the joint family and the very basis on which the Courts below have proceeded cannot, therefore, be sustained.

A mortgagee is not in a position to deny the right of the mortgagors or their successors in interest to redeem the mortgage so long as the equity of redemption subsists, and as pointed out in Seshamma Shettati v. Chickaya Hegade (1) a person who lawfully comes into possession of land as a mortgagee cannot by setting up during the continuance of such relation any title adverse to that of the mortgagor inconsistent with the real legal relation between them, and that, however, notoriously and to the knowledge of the other party—acquire, by the operation of the law of adverse possession a title as owner or any other title inconsistent with that under which he was let into possession. In Kunwar Sen v. Darbari Lal (2) and Khairaj Mal v. Daim (3) the same rule was enforced.

It is not, therefore, open to Naurang Singh and his successors-in-interest to set up an adverse title so long as the right of the plaintiffs to redeem the mortgages subsists and is not barred by limitation. The orders passed in the mutation proceedings did not operate to extinguish the title of the plaintiffs. In fact the orders referred to upheld or allowed the entry of the names of Thakur Prasad Singh and his son Bikha Singh in the revenue papers and the possession of Naurang Singh which appears to have continued in spite of the entries of their names can only be attributed to the title which he possessed as a mortgagee, of the whole of the mortgaged properties till redemption was effected in due course of law.

The appeal in these circumstances must be allowed and the case remanded to the lower Apellate Court with a direction to reinstate the appeal to its original number and to dispose of it after deciding the other points involved in the case in the manner provided by the law. The costs here and hitherto will abide the result. The costs in this Court will include fees on the higher scale.

Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), ss. 23, 31—Protection before and after adjudication.

Under section 23 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, protection before adjudication can be allowed if the debtor is under arrest or imprisoned in execution of a decree of any Court. Section 31 applies after the order of adjudication is made. [p. 938, col. 2.]

Appeal against the order of the District Court, Coimbatore, dated the 16th September 1923, in I. A. No. 268 of 1923 in I. P. No. 80 of 1923.

Mr. M. S. Vydianada Iyer, for the Appellant.

Mr. S S. Ramachandra Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from the order of the District Judge of Coimbatore refusing protection to the appellant who has filed a petition in insolvency in that Court. The petition has been admitted but no order of adjudication has been made at the time the application for protection was made or even now. The learned Judge has refused protection on the ground that the insolvent had made two fraudulent transfers just before he made the application. We do not, however, propose to go into that question in appeal. Section 31 of the Provincial Insolvency Act deals with applications for protection only after the order of adjudication is made and that stage has not been reached in this case yet. The only other provision which deals expressly with what may be called protection before adjudication is section 23. That section says "At the time of making an order admitting the petition or at any subsequent time before adjudication, the Court may, if the debtor is under arrest or imprisonment in execution of a decree of any Court for the payment of money, order his release on such terms as to security as may be reasonable and necessary.' The condition under which the Provincial Insolvency Act allows the Court to interfere between an insolvent and his judgment creditors before adjudication is where a decree-holder had arrested him. An insolvent is not entitled to make an application under the Act for protection before he is adjudicated, unless he has been arrested, because there is really no necessity till then for any protection. If the insolvent wants to apply for protection, he ought to expedite matters in such a way as to get his order of adjudication first and then ask the Court to grant protection under section 31. Neither the state of affairs contemplated in section 31 nor by section 23 has arisen in this case. We, therefore, think that there is no necessity to grant protection at this stage. If the insolvent is arrested hereafter, it will be open to him to apply under section 23 and we have no doubt that the Court will consider his case on the merits and not allow the order now passed by the District Judge to stand in the way of such consideration. Similarly, if he gets an order of adjudication, he may apply under section 31. But at this stage we do not think it necessary to interfere. The appeal is, therefore, dismissed with costs.

Dr. S. N. Sen, for the Appellant.

Mr. K. Verma, for Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a nice point and a very interesting point, namely as to the meaning of the words "seen it" used with reference to a document in section 63 of the Evidence Act. The facts of the case are so far as they are material that an attesting witness to a certain mortgage transaction for Rs. 80, alleged to have taken place in 1865, which is either lost or not forthcoming, so as to entitle the party to give secondary evidence of it, was produced in the Trial Court. His name was Anandi Lal. He was ignorant of Persian character, and, therefore, unable to read the document itself, but he purported to give evidence, or at any rate the first Court of appeal understood him to give evidence, that the contents of the document were either translated, or read out to him, or explained to him, in such a way that he was able to remember them, and he gave on oath his recollection of the material contents of the document, and has been believed by the first Court of appeal. If that finding of fact can be justified in law, the plaintiff's case is established. The question is whether the judge was entitled to hear and believe the witness's oral account of the contents of the document. The matter came before a Judge of this Court, and in a very clear judgment he has held that the District Judge was not so entitled. He rightly says: under sub-section 5 of section 63, only a witness who has himself seen a document is entitled to give evidence of it," and he goes on to say "this clearly implies that it must be a witness who could read "the document," and he follows a decision of Mr. Justice Tudball in the case of Ghure v. Chatrapal Singh (1). After hearing the matter very fully argued, we have come to the conclusion, with great respect to these two Judges, that we are unable to agree. The critical words in the section are "seen it." The result of the decision would be, for example, that a highly educated person knowing several languages except German, who had seen an original document in German which had been lost, and who was interested in its contents and had had them translated to him by an equally highly educated person who knew German, and explained to him phrase by phrase in such a way that the English translation of the German contents were firmly imprinted on his memory, could not give the contents of that document in evidence under section 63, although he undoubtedly had seen the document. It does not follow, because an interpretation leads to a startling result, that it is necessarily wrong,

But it must be admitted that the interpretation which produces this result is not the literal meaning of the language used but involves the addition of words which are not in the section. Nobody can doubt that one is from time to time compelled to imply or read into the language of an ambiguous section something which is not actually there, but as a general rule the safest course is to hold fast to the exact language in its ordinary interpretation, if it is capable of bearing it. It is difficult to draw the line once you begin to introduce ideas of your own, and a loose method of interpretation undoubtedly leads to a great deal of difference of opinion and uncertainty. We are of opinion that the section means what it says. The question is, has the witness seen the document? The further question whether he is able to give evidence of its contents, is a question of his credibility. Mr. Justice Tudball in his judgmeut is of opinion that the words "seen it" mean having seen and examined the document, so as to be in a position to give direct evidence of its contents. The section does not say that. It might have said "read it." It says neither. If, as might be expected, the legislature intended the right of the witness to give the contenes, to depend upon what he saw, the language should have been not "seen it", but seen them." As the matter stands, he is allowed to give an oral account of the contents, when he has merely seen the document, and obviously ouce he has seen the document, his capacity to give the contents may result, not from what he saw, but from what he was told at the time when he saw it. In other words the admissibility of the evidence is one thing, the weight to be attached to it by a Judge of fact is another. If one were to indulge in speculation upon what is undoubtedly a rather interesting literary problem, it is not impossible that the original intention was to say "read it." But a great proportion of the population in India cannot read at all, and that provision would have excluded a large body of valuable evidence. Whether this was so or not, we have to take the language as we find it, according to its natural meaning. The fact that the witness has seen it makes his oral account admissible. The important question whether his account is credible is a question of fact for the Trial Court.

We, therefore, allow the appeal and restore the decree of the District Judge with costs here and below, including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 19—Acknowledgment—Liability—Burden of proof.

Where some property or right is claimed against the maker of an acknowledgment under section 19, Limitation Act, it is immaterial whether at the moment of his making the acknowledgment, the claim could have been enforced against him, as against him the acknowledgmentis sufficient. [p. 941, col. 1.]

If a person, who has prima facie no business to make an acknowledgment, makes it, the burden of proving why the acknowledgment was made lies upon him. But if the acknowledgment is alleged to bind other persons, the person so alleging should prove some sort of agency and authority on the part of the maker of the acknowledgment. [p. 941, col. 1.]

Petition under section 25 of Act IX of 1887 praying the High Court to revise the decree of the Court of the Subordinate Judge, Bezwada, in Small Cause Suit No. 491 of 1921.

Mr. P. Satyanarayana, for the Petitioner.

Mr. G. Lakhmanna, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The suit is for Rs. 252-9-3 (Rupees two hundred and fifty two, annas nine and pies three only) due on dealings. The lower Court has found that the amount is due but has dismissed the suit as barred by limitation. Plaintiff accordingly prefers this Civil Revision Petition. The point for decision is whether 4th defendant has made such acknowledgment of liability as falls within the mischief of section 19 Indian Limitation Act. There were two partners, first defendant and one Seshayya father of 4th defendant. On 1st December 1918, (Exhibit C,) 4th defendant wrote to plaintiff: "In respect of the amount due to you under the joint account opened with you in the names of my father and Rajasree Kottumasu Narasimham Garu (1st defendant) I agree to pay you the whole amount with interest after taking accounts." The date of this letter will admittedly save the bar of limitation and it seems to be a clear acknowledgment of liability. It is strenuously contended that 4th defendant had no business to make this acknowledgment at this date that he was neither partner nor agent and acted gratuitously. I do not think that the onus rests upon plaintiff to prove why the acknowledgment was made; that was a fact peculiarly within the knowledge of the 4th defendant. No doubt if the plaintiff wished to establish that 4th defendant by his acknowledgment committed other defendants also he would have to prove some sort of agency and authority and that is the only point which the lower Court has considered. As regards himself 4th defendant's bare acknowledgment is sufficient for plaintiffs purpose and the statute requires nothing more. So long as the 4th defendant is the person against whom the property or right is claimed it does not matter whether at the moment of his making the acknowledgment the claim could have been enforced. Jugal Kishore v. Fakruddin. (1)

I find, therefore, that there is no bar of limitation as against 4th defendant, and plaintiff is entitled to a decree against such assets of ancestral property of Seshayya as can be traced to 4th defendant. Once the bar of limitation is removed there is no doubt that 4th defendant is bound by his pious obligation. Costs against 4th defendant throughout.

Appeal against the decree of the Additional District Judge, Meerut, dated the 15th November 1922.

Dr. K. N. Katju, for the Appellants.

Mr. Iqbal Ahmad, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs, occupancy tenants to the extent of 1/3rd in an occupancy holding sued for possession of specific plots on the ground that the holding had been divided between them and the defendants and they had been in possession of these specific plots from which they had been unlawfully ejected. The learned Munsif was of opinion that such a suit for specific possession was barred under the provisions of section 32 (2) of the Tenancy Act and granted to the plaintiffs joint possession with the defendants to the extent of 1/3rd of the entire holding. On appeal by the plaintiffs the learned District Judge was of opinion that a suit for possession in pursuance of existing facts and previous separate possession of co-tenants was not a suit or other proceeding for the division of a holding or distribution of rent thereof and was not barred by any provision of the Tenancy Act. The matter is concluded by a decision in Letters Patent of a Bench of this Court in Raghunath Kalwar v. Bala Din Kolwar (1). The case was first heard by one learned Judge and afterwards by another learned Judge as the first Judge omitted to sign the judgment. The Letters Patent Appeal was heard by two other Judges. So in reality the opinion to that effect was confirmed by four learned Judges of this Court. In that case a former decree was pleaded as res judicata and the defence was that the decree was inoperative as having been passed contrary to the provisions of section 32 (2). The judgment pleaded as a bar was delivered in a case similar to the one here. The learned Chief Justice observed:—

"There is no objection to joint tenants agreeing among themselves to occupy and cultivate distinct parts of the joint holding, provided that their so doing in no respect prejudices the rights of the landholder."

The other learned Judge (Banerji J) said:—

"The former suit was not one for partition of a holding or the distribution of the rent thereof but was a suit for exclusive possession of certain plots of land which the then plaintiff claimed to be separate property. The Court which tried that suit had jurisdiction to entertain it."

The learned Counsel for the defendant-appellant referred to three former rulings of this Court :—

Achhey Lal v. Janki Prasad (2), Ashiq Husain v. Asgari Begam (3), Najib Ullah v. Gulsher Khan (4).

In the Full Bench case the case reported in Achhecy Lal v. Janki Prasad (2), was distinguished because the parties in that case had only the shadowy right of the mortgagees of an occupancy holding. The case reported in Ashiq Husain v. Asgari Begam (3), did not depend upon any previous division but desired the Court actually to divide the holding. Such a suit would naturally offend against the provisions of section 32 (2). I do not think that the ruling in Ghunath Kalwar v. Rag Bala Din Kalwar is in any way in conflict with former rulings of this Court. When once co-tenants are in separate possession of separate plots out of the holding and one of the co-tenants is dispossessed, he is entitled to sue for specific possession of the plots from which he is dispossessed, so long as the suit is instituted against the co-tenants and not the land-lord. Such possession does not in any way interfere with the rights of the land-lord.

I dismiss this appeal with costs which shall include here Counsel's fees on the higher scale.

Petitions under section 115 of Act V of 1908 and section 107 of the Government of India Act, praying the High Court to revise the order dated 26th October 1922 of the Court of the District Munsif, Srirangam, in I. A. Nos. 544 of 1922 and 568 of 1922 in O. S. No. 420 of 1919 and I. A. Nos. 569 of 1922 and 545 of 1922 in O.S. No. 396 of 1920 respectively.

Mr. T. V. Muthukrishna Iyer, for the Petitioner.

Messrs. L. A. Govinda Raghava Iyer and W. S. Subrahmania Iyer, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In O. S. No. 420 of 1919 on the file of the Court of the District Munsiff of Srirangam, the plaintiff Pichu-Aiyar died. Both his widow Rukmani Ammal, the present petitioner and his daughter Seethai Ammal, the present 2nd respondent applied to be brought on record as legal representative. The District Munsif found that Rukmani Ammal was a minor who had no right to apply in her own right and dismissed her application. Having done so, he disposed of Seethai Ammal's application by merely recording "defendant (present 1st respondent) has no objection." And Rukmani Ammal now applies to have both orders revised.

I cannot hold that the District Munsif acted irregularly in rejecting Rukmani Ammal's application. On the analogy of O. XXXII, r. 2, he exercised a discretion allowed him by law, though I think he exercised that discretion very hastily Cf. Rattonbai v. Chabbildas Lalloobhoy (1). But I cannot find that the District Munsif was justified in adding Seethai Ammal as legal representative without determining the question on its merits after notice had gone to Rukmani and she had raised the question. The mere fact that Rukmani was discovered to be a minor was no reason for not considering her plea that she was the rightful representative. Here the analogy to be applied is that under O. XXXII, r. 3. The respondents do not attempt to justify the action of the Court which indeed is quite opposed to the oridinary duties of a Court in regard to minors, so much as to show that the petitioner has no right to move this Court for Revision. They contend that her remedy was by way of appeal against the order, or at any rate by way of suit after reaching her majority, and in any case her application has been unduly delayed.

There is no statutory right of appeal against an order under O. XXII, r. 3. The Legislature has chosen not to give a right of appeal against orders under that rule. Lakshmi Achi v. Subrama Aiyar (2). But respondents rely upon Ayya Mudali Velan v. Veerayee (3), where it is held that an order rejecting the claim of a person to the legal representative of a deceased plaintiff is appealable in cases where such orders have also the character of decrees. If it is to have this character, the order must conclusively determine the rights of the parties in the suit, and it so happens that all the parties in Ayya Mudali Velan v. Veerayee (3), were parties in the suit, the 2nd defendant was the person applying to be plaintiff's legal representative. In Lakshmi Achi v. Subrama Aiyar (2), and in the present case the persons applying to be legal representatives were never parties to the suit and this application having been rejected, they could never have been regarded as such and it is clear from Ayya Mudali Velan v. Veerayee (3), itself that the learned Judges still regarded Lakshmi Achi v. Subrama Aiyar, (2) as good law in regard to the facts of that case (cf. p. 815). I, therefore, find that the petitioner had no remedy by way of appeal and is entitled to move for revision.

I do not think it necessary to drive petitioner to a fresh suit, nor do I think that her remedy lies that way. The lower Court having appointed a legal representative that appointment, unless it is set aside, is final, and binds the estate. "If the Court decides wrong the

I do not find that there has been inordinate delay. Petitioner first sought her remedy by way of review on grounds which were certainly not frivolous. Nor I do see any reason for holding that petitioner is still a minor, and even if she were, I should not reject her petition. On that account, there would only be a formal question of appointing a guardian-ad litem. Accordingly I allow C.R.Ps. 401 and 402 with costs, one set. I reverse the order of the lower Court and direct the District Munsiff to determine the question whether Rukmani Ammal or Seethaiammal is or is not the legal representative of the deceased plaintiff, Pichu Ayer and then proceed with the suit. C. R. Ps. Nos. 403 and 400 are dismissed with costs, one set.

3. That the suit is barred by section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act.

4. That the suit is barred by adverse possession.

5. Because the mortgage-money should include revenue with interest thereon paid by the appellant.

No argument was addressed to us on the last point and we have, therefore, to consider the first four grounds only.

Plea 1. The learned Judge refused to go into the question of plaintiff's title because he said it had not been seriously contested in the Trial Court or raised in the grounds of appeal to him. The plaintiffs set out their title in para. 3 of their plaint. The defendant entered a formal denial of this paragraph and in his further pleas set out in considerable detail an alleged oral sale by the original owner Parmeshwar Upadhia in his favour. There was nothing further in his written statement to indicate that the plaintiffs' title was challenged on any other ground. The learned Munsif framed an issue. "Are the plaintiffs entitled to redeem? If so on payment of what amount?" In the earlier part of his judgment he gave reasons for rejecting the alleged oral sale. In dealing with this issue he merely set out the facts constituting the plaintiffs' title without any indication of any arguments which had been put forward challenging it, and then went on to discuss the amount on which redemption should be granted. In the grounds of appeal to the Court below the first ground, and the only one relied on as containing this objection, runs as follows:

> "It is fully proved from the entire evidence on the record that Parmeshwar Upadhia sold his interest in the mortgaged property in favour of the appellant and got the mutation of names effected accordingly and that the appellant has been since then in the proprietary possession of the property. The plaintiffs are by no means entitled to sue for redemption."

Reading this ground as a whole it is clear that while it challenges the plaintiffs' title it does so on the ground that this title is done away with by the alleged previous sale to the defendant and on no other ground. We are of opinion, therefore, that the learned Judge was right in the conclusion at which he arrived on this issue. We may note that before us the appellant does not rely on the alleged oral sale.

Plea 2. The learned Judge finds that the deed is ambiguous on the face of it. It is admittedly ungrammatical and cannot be read literally so as to give any clear meaning. In order to arrive at the construction they desire to place on it the appellant and the respondents alike have to supply or remove some words from the document as it stands. The appellant suggests that the words "Jeth Sudi Puránmasi Sambat 2039" have been written once where they should have been written twice and by repeating these words it is possible to read the document as meaning.

> "The mortgagee shall remain in possession and take the produce of both shares and spend it year by year in lieu of his interest from to-day up to the full moon of Jeth Sambet 2039. On that date if I, the executant, or my heirs pay the money from my own pocket I shall get back the land and the document."

On the other hand by simply omitting the particle "ko" it is capable of being read as meaning,

> "The aforesaid mortgagee shall take possession and expend the produce year by year in lieu of his interest. If from to-day up to the full moon of Sambat 2039 I, the executant, or my heirs pay the money, etc., I shall get back the land and the document."

There is, therefore, a patent ambiguity in the deed and under section 93 of the Evidence Act no evidence is admissible to supply the defect. The learned Judge was right in holding that under these circumstances the mortgage-money must be taken to be repayable at any time. We may add that even if we were prepared to place on the deed the construction for which the appellant contends we should hold that the conditions of the deed amounted to a clog on the equity of redemption and were unenforceable. Not only is the mortgage, on this view, for a period of 82 years but even at the end of that time only one day was allowed for redemption and unless the money was paid on that particular day the mortgage was to become a sale and the mortgagor was to lose his title altogether. There is a further covenant that the mortgagor is to pay the money from his own pocket and that he is not at liberty to redeem the mortgage with borrowed money. The case is very similar to Sarbdawan Singh v. Bijai Singh (1), in which similar conditions were treated as a clog on the equity of redemption and as not being enforceable.

Plea 3. The plea based on section 233 (k) of the Land Revenue Act is fully dealt with by the learned Munsif whose views are adopted by the learned Judge and are sufficient to dispose of this plea. The plea is based on the fact that in the partition record the mortgagee is shown as proprietor of a share equal to the share in dispute. As the learned Munsif has shown this share was interpolated in the khewat in addition to the original shares which made up the total area. The mortgagor retained his original share unimpaired and his name continued to be recorded in respect of it. Section 233 (k) cannot possibly apply to circumstances like these.

Plea 4. The plea of adverse possession loses all force in face of the appellant's admission that he cannot rely on the oral sale in his favour. He has nothing in support of it except the mutation entry. A mere mutation entry of the mortgagee as a proprietor clearly cannot convert his possession as mortgagee into adverse possession.

For these reasons the appeal fails and we dismiss it with costs including in this Court fees on the higher scale.

CIVIL REVISION NO. 262 OF 1923.

July 31, 1924.

HIRALAL—PLAINTIFF—APPLICANT

TULSIRAM AND ANOTHER—
DEFENDANTS—NON-APPLICANTS.

Estoppel, plea of—Provincial Insolvency Act (V of 1920), s. 28—Adjudication order passed—Debt incurred subsequently—Suit to recover, whether barred—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 91.

A plea of estoppel is a plea of mixed fact and law and has to be urged in the Trial Court. It cannot, therefore, be entertained for the first time in revision. [p 946, col. 2.]

A debt or liability incurred by an insolvent after the order of adjudication is not provable under the Insolvency Act But the jurisdiction of a Civil Court to entertain a suit in respect of such a debt or liability is not barred by the Provincial Insolvency Act, so as to oust the jurisdiction which vests in a Civil Court, to try all suits of a civil nature under section 9 of the Civil Procedure Code. [p. 947, col. 2.]

Revision against the order of the Small Cause Court Judge, Khandwa, in Civil Suit No. 451 of 1923, dated the 6th September 1923.

Mr. Fida Hussain, for the Applicant.

ORDER.—This application for revision arises out of a suit instituted on 18th January 1923 by the applicant Hiralal against the non-applicant Tulsiram and his son Nima on the basis of a bond dated 31st May 1920 for a cash consideration of Rs. 50 advanced as a loan to them.

The defence was that defendant No. 1 having been declared insolvent on 15th April 1916, was incompetent to borrow the debt and to contract or incur any pecuniary obligation, after the date of the adjudication, and secondly that non-applicant No. 2 being a minor was also incompetent to contract. The Small Cause Court Judge gave effect to both these contentions and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff has come up in revision.

The applicant's contentions before me are that the adjudication dated 15th April 1916 did not affect the insolvent's liability for the debt incurred thereafter i. e., on 31st May 1920, and that the defendant No. 2 was estopped from raising the plea of minority.

I may dispose of the second contention first. A plea of estoppel is a plea of mixed fact and law and has to be urged in the Trial Court. It cannot, therefore, be entertained at this late stage. I, therefore, overrule this contention. The suit has been rightly dismissed as against defendant No. 2 and I decline to interfere with its dismissal.

I now proceed to deal with the first contention. In connection with this contention it is urged that the debt sued for is not provable under the Insolvency Act and that under old section 16 which corresponds to new section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act, a creditor to whom an insolvent is indebted in respect of any debt provable under the Insolvency Act, is precluded from having any recourse to a suit or other legal proceeding except with the leave of the Court, and he is also deprived of his remedy against the property of the insolvent in respect of such debt and not in respect of debts not so provable. Old section 28 corresponding to new section 34 of the said Act defines what debts are provable under the Act. "All debts and liabilities to which the debtor is subject when he is adjudged an insolvent, or to which he may become subject before his discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the date of such adjudication" are to be deemed to be "debts provable under the act." The necessary consequence holder," — Payment to attaching creditor of decree-holder, whether payment to decree-holder.

The term " decree holder " as defined in section 2 (3) of the Civil Procedure Code does not include an attaching creditor of the decree-holder.[p. 950, col. 1.]

Therefore, payment out of Court of the decretal amount by the judgment-debtor to the attaching creditor of the decree holder is not a payment to the decree-holder within the meaning of r 1(b) of O. XXI, Civil Procedure Code. [p. 950, col. 1.]

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Benares, dated the 5th October 1923.

Mr. Harendra Krishna Mukerji, for the Appellant.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal raises a question of law, and it is unfortunate that the respondent is not represented.

Briefly the facts are these. The appellant holds a decree for money against one Ram Pargash Singh. The final decree in the case was made on 16th March 1922. The decree-holder Ram Badan Singh was the judgment-debtor in a decree held by two persons Ram Harakh and Musammat Rup Kali. The decree in favour of these two persons was passed sometime in 1907. In 1922 Ram Harakh and Rup Kali sought the execution of that decree by the attachment of the decree held by Ram Badan against Ram Pargash. On an application being made by Ram Harakh and Rup Kali an order was passed for the attachment of the decree held by Ram Badan Singh. The application was, however, struck off for default of prosecution on the 23rd of December 1922. The attachment was consequently automatically removed. On 16th March 1923 Ram Badan Singh sought the execution of his decree by the arrest of Ram Paragash. Ram Pargash was arrested and brought into Court. On that date a certificate of satisfaction of the decree held by Ram Harakh and Rup Kali was granted by the decree-holders. The Court of first instance held that the certificate of satisfaction was a collusive transaction and did not exonerate Ram Pargash from paying the money due by him to Ram Badan under the decree held by the latter. The lower Appellate Court, however, held the contrary view with the result that Ram Badan's decree was found to be inexecutable.

In this Court it has been urged that assuming that Ram Pargash did really pay the decretal amount due to Ram Badan to Ram Harakh and Rup Kali, this payment made out of Court was not valid at law and did not result in the satisfaction of the decree held by Ram Badan Singh.

I think this contention is right. The methods of payment of money under a decree are laid down in r. 1, O. XXI of the Civil Procedure Code. It may be mentioned here that the decree in favour of Ram Badan was passed by a Subordinate Judge and that in favour of Ram Harakh was passed by a Munsif. The methods of payment are:—

(1) into the Court whose duty it is to execute the decree; or

(2) out of Court to the decree-holder ; or

(3) otherwise as the Court which made the decree directs.

It will be observed that none of these methods was adopted by Ram Pargash. It was the duty of the Subordinate Judge to execute the decree under which Ram Pargash had to make payment. If a payment into Court had to be made that payment should have been made into the Court of the Subordinate Judge. It is, however, nobody's case that any payment into Court was made. For the payment to the decree-holder out of Court, the payment must be made to the holder of the decree in respect of which the payment has to be made. The definition of the term "decree-holder" is given in section 2 (3) of the Code of Civil Procedure and does not include an attaching creditor of the decree-holder. The payment, therefore, to the attaching creditor of the decree-holder is not a payment to the decree-holder within the meaning of r. 1 (b) of O. XXI. The last clause does not apply. The payment, therefore, to the attaching creditor Ram Harakh and Rup Kali was no such payment as could discharge Ram Pargash from the decree passed in favour of Ram Badan Singh.

That this conclusion is correct can be seen by examining the facts of the case. When a person purporting to be a decree-holder seeks the attachment of another decree, it is open to the decree-holder, whose decree is sought to be attached, to impugn the attachment. If without giving the decree-holder, whose decree has been attached, an opportunity to impugn the attachment, his judgment-debtor should make a payment to the person who professes to be the attaching creditor, room for fraud would be opened. In this particular case the final decree in favour of Ram Harakh and Rup Kali was passed as long ago as in 1907. Their application of 1922 was on the face of it barred by twelve years' rule of limitation (section 48, Civil Procedure Code. Obviously it was never the intention of the legislature that a debtor liable under a decree which has been attached should obtain a discharge by payment to the person who professes to possess a right to attach the decree.

The appeal succeeds. I set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and dismiss the objection of Ram Pargash as to payment. Ram Pargash will pay the costs of the decree holder Ram Badan Singh in this Court and the Court below. The execution proceedings will proceed.

Contract Act (IX of 1872), ss. 56, 65—Transfer prohibited by law—Suit for refund of consideration—Performance of contract rendered impossible.

If the object of an agreement is to evade the statutory prohibition of the transfer of occupancy land, the contract is void ab initio and no suit lies to recover money paid under the unlawful agreement

If a party by his conduct renders the performance of the contract impossible, he is not entitled to recover anything by way of damages from the other party.

Appeal against the decree of the District Judge, Nimar, dated the 10th July 1923, in Civil Appeal No. 94 of 1923.

Mr. W. R. Puranik, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. B. Gokhale, for the Respondents

JUDGMENT.—The facts are set out in the judgments of the Courts below. The document on which the plaintiffs sue is not a mortgage of the land but of the crops for a period of 16 years. The first Court held the suit maintainable for the recovery of the consideration and awarded the plaintiffs Rs. 900, without damages.

On appeal this decree was set aside by the District Judge, Nimar, who held that by their own act the plaintiffs had rendered it impossible for the defendants to perform the part of the contract, by taking possession of the land and thus laying themselves open to eviction by the lambardar.

Plaintiffs make this second appeal.

It is contended that under section 56 of the Indian Contract Act the performance of the contract having become impossible, owing to the lambardar having taken possession, the defendants who have received the advantage under the agreement are bound under section 65 to restore it to the plaintiffs.

The appellants rely on Mathura Mohan Saha v. Ramkumar Saha and Haribhai Hansji v. Nathubai Ratnaji (2). The first of these cases relates to a Company receiving certain advantage under an illegal agreement, and the second is the case of a mortgage which was found to be void under the provisions of the Bombay Bhagdari Act. The principle laid down in section 65 of the Contract Act will not of course be disputed, but the peculiar feature of the present case is that the plaintiffs made the performance of the contract impossible by taking possession of the land of which the crops were mortgaged to them by defendants. Therefore, the landlord interfered and got a decree for the ejectment of plaintiffs, the result being that the land is now lost to defendants who are therefore incapable of performing the terms of the agreement.

(1) 35 Ind. Cas. 205 ; 43 C. 790; 23 C. L. J. 26 ; 20 C. W. N. 870.
(2) 28 Ind. Cas. 601; 38 B. 249 ; 16 Bom. L. R, 62.

The Judge of the lower Appellate Court has found as a fact that this happened and he further finds that the transaction was intended to be a sale in contravention of the law which prohibits the transfer of occupanay land, and he has held on the evidence that in spite of the agreement that defendant should cultivate the land, it was plaintiffs who cultivated, sold and reaped.

It is now contended that under the terms of the agreement plaintiffs were to reap the crops. But I cannot go behind the finding of fact. Plaintiffs admit they they were ejected, but do not produce the judgment in the suit in which they were ejected, and in the absence of evidence to the contrary it must be assumed that at any rate at the date of the suit they were in actual possession of the land. If the purpose of the agreement was to evade the statutory prohibition of the transfer of occupancy land, the contract is void ab initio and no suit will lie to recover money paid under the unlawful agreement: Cf. Bai Diwali v. Umedbhai Bhulabhai Patel (3) and Narayan v. Motisa (4). In any case the lower Appellate Court having found that the plaintiffs by taking possession had rendered the performance of the contract by the defendants impossible, the plaintiffs are not entitled to recover anything from the defendants, and section 53 of the Contract Act will apply.

I agree with the view of the lower Appellate Court that the suit must fail and the appeal is dismissed with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. IX, r. 8—Vakils' absence whether constitutes default.

When a Vakil represents a party, the right of audience is, for the time being, vested in him and if he is absent there is default. [p. 950, col. 2.]

Appeal from an order of the Second Additional District Judge, Gorakhpur, dated the 6th April 1923.

Mr. P. L. Banerji, for the Appellants.

Mr. Harnandan Prasad, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—We think that the learned Judge who has disposed of this application has missed the point. When a Vakil represents his client the right of audience is, for the time being, vested in him. For the purpose of continuing the hearing, or commencing the hearing, he is the appellant. If he is absent, there is default. According to the entry in the order-sheet the appellant was absent as well as his Vakil. Possibly he was running after him to see if he could find him, but even if he had been corporeally present, in the sense in which the Judge whose order is appealed from appears to mean, we think that in the eyes of the law he was not present in such a sense as to prevent the absence of the Vakil from being a default. If a Judge is anxious to assist a party in distress he can give him a little time to obtain the assistance of a new Vakil, or adjourn the case, and make him pay costs or something of that sort, but for a default of this kind we do not think that, subject to the penalty usually inflicted the client should be deprived of the right of having his appeal heard. We, therefore, allow this appeal though not as a matter of right.

see nothing in section 179 to support this theory. If we assume that the appointment of a Municipal Commissioner is for the benefit of a town and that no such appointment can be made unless the Municipality has supported this action it seems to be within the power and duties of the Municipality to ask for such an appointment. On the other hand if a Municipal Commissioner is appointed as a sort of penal measure for the City the power of the Municipality to empower the Governor-in-Council to make such an appointment is a power. So far as this goes, I canot see, how the Committee of Management under section 179 can be precluded from exercising the power of the Municipality under section 186 (a).

Of course the difficulty does arise in view of the clause in section 186 providing that this application must be supported by not less than 2|3rds of the whole number of the Councillors. It might perhaps be argued that this proviso applies only in the case where the Municipality was functioning and was inapplicable to a condition of things when a Committee of Mangement was in existence. But it is not necessary to discuss or decide that question. Taking the more liberal view adopted by the learned District Judge namely that the Committee of Management must as far as possible be considered bound by the procedure laid down in the Municipal Act, we find in this case ⅔rds of the Committee of Management did suppport this application.

The Legislature has not laid down with very great precision how the Committee of Management under section 179 is to function. All that is said is that the powers and duties of the suspended body should be exercised by such person or persons as may be appointed. Procedure is not "power and duty," the exercise of power and duty is the goal, procedure is the road by which we reach it. It is obviously unreasonable to suppose that the whole of the procedure laid down in the Act should be followed in its entirety and that it is verbally incumbent upon any persons or person appointed by Government to carry on the functions of the Municipality. It is of course very often the cumbrous procedure or the abuse of the procedure which leads to the suspension of the Municipality and to the creation of the Committee of Management e. g., section 179 contemplates appointment of one person to carry on the duties of the Municipality and I believe cases have occurred in which one person has been so appointed. It is obvious that in the case of one person, he could not delegate functions to Committees and Sub-Committees as contemplated by the Municipal Act and it cannot, therefore, be ruled that the whole of the procedure laid down in the Act must apply to the Committee of Management. It is enough, we think, that the persons who are delegated to do the duties of the Municipality carry out their functions in a reasonable and equitable manner, keeping an eye, as far as possible, on the provisions of the Municipal Act, but not being bound by them with the same strictness as the elected Municipality would be. For instance in the case of section 60, the Committee of Management would no doubt be bound before imposing a tax to adopt a good deal of the procedure adopted in that section inasmuch as it is in accordance with justice. But they would not be bound by every one of the formalities laid down in that section, e. g., it would obviously be unnecessary to refer the consideration of objections to a Sub-Committee or to a "general meeting" according to the meaning of that expression in the Act.

In the present case, the exact number of the Committee is not certain because there is doubt as to whether one member of the Committee was, as a matter of fact at the time a member or not. It appears that the maximum number including the Chairman was 6. It would be necessary to sanction a proposal for the appointment of Municipal Commissioner under section 186 (a) that it should be supported by votes of ⅔rds of the whole number of Councillors that is to say in all 4. It appears 3 members voted for it and the Chairman who had circulated this report sanctioned it. The motion was, therefore, supported by 4 members if the Chairman's vote is to be counted. I cannot myself see why the Chairman's vote should not be counted. He was not an official president, that he should be barred under section 24 (2) of the Act. There is nothing in natural justice to prevent the Chairman whether an official or not, from voting on the motion before him. It seems to me, therefore, clear that this application for the appointment of a Municipal Commissioner was properly supported by the body which filled the place of the Municipality which was entitled by law to exercise powers which the Municipality would have had, had they continued to function.

It was objected that there was an irregularity in the manner in which the opinion of the majority was elicited, and it might be that the sending out of the circular without having been absolutely sure it was circulated to all the members of the Board was an irregularity. But clearly in dealing with such an irregularity as that, one must consider that this suit is not brought by any of the Committee to enforce his or its rights, but by a member of the general public. It does not appear that any of the members of the Committee of Management have ever raised any protest against the procedure though many years have elapsed since the circular was circulated and it does not, therefore, seem to me that even if the irregularity had been more serious than it was, the Court would on an application of a private rate-payer set aside the action of the Committee in toto. If there had been a serious irregularity, the more correct course would be for the Court to order the Committee of Management to take a fresh vote. But to proceed by way of an injunction and to grant a declaration that the appointment is illegal and ultra vires on account of a technical irregularity is a very extreme measure, and the Court would not adopt it unless it was impossible to do justice in any other way.

I am of the opinion, therefore, that the District Judge is right on all grounds in refusing the declaration and injunction prayed for. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Aston, A. J. C.—I concur.

I only wish to add that in my opinion section 24 (2) of the Bombay District Municipal Act has no application to the Chairman of a Committee of Management appointed under section 179.

Plaintiff agreed to purchase a shop from the defendant for a certain price. A sale-deed was executed but it was not registered and the defendant subsequently sold the shop to a third person. Plaintiff sued the defendant for the return of the sale-deed, or, in the alternative, for execution of a fresh sale deed and, for registration of the deed. He did not ask for possession of the shop as he alleged that he was in possession of it;

Held, that the plaintiff's cause of action was the defendant's refusal to carry out the agreement of sale, and the suit was, therefore, one for specific performance of a contract and fell within section 7 (X) (a) of the Court Fees Act, Court fees being payable on the amount of the consideration. JUDGMENT.—On the 30th of June 1921 an agreement was executed under which the defendant-appellant agreed to sell a certain shop to the plaintiff-respondent. On the 1st of July 1921 a sale-deed was executed and handed over to the Sub-Registrar. Subsequently in the absence of the plaintiff the deed was returned to the defendant and was not registered. The defendant subsequently sold the shop to a third person who is not a party to the present proceedings.

Plaintiff in his plaint sought three reliefs :—

(1) return of the original deed ; or in the alternative,

(2) execution of a fresh deed ; and

(3) registration of the deeds mentioned in (1) and (2).

He valued relief (1) at Rs. 5 and paid a Court-fee of Re. 0 6-0 thereon. The alternative relief he claimed to be included in relief (1) and on relief (3) he paid a Court-fee of Rs. 10. The Trial Court held that the suit was in reality one for specific performance of a contract and that the Court-fee should be paid ad valorem on the amount of consideration for sale, namely, Rs. 1,200. It therefore ordered the plaintiff to make up the deficiency in the Court-fee and on his not doing so rejected the plaint. On appeal the learned District Judge held that the suit so far as relief (1) is concerned was governed by section 7 (iv) (a) of the Court Fees Act ; that the alternative relief was covered by the larger relief of restoration of the original sale-deed ; and that the relief for registration was properly valued. He therefore accepted the appeal and set aside the order of rejection of the plaint.

The defendant has filed an appeal to this Court ; and it is argued that the suit was in reality one for specific performance of a contract. The plaintiff in the plaint alleges that he is in possession of the property sold and therefore he did not sue for possession. At the same time he appended a note to the plaint stating that if he is found to be not in possession then he might be allowed to amend the plaint.

In order to see what the plaintiff's suit really is it is necessary to understand what his cause of action is. His cause of action is obviously the defendant's refusal to carry out the agreement for sale. In the case of Muhi-ud-Din Ahmad Khan v. Majlis Rai (1) it was held that a suit to have a sale-deed executed and completed and for possession of the property was a suit for specific performance of a contract. The case of Nihal Singh v. Sewa Ram (2) is similar. These cases are sought to be distinguished on the ground that in them there was a prayer for possession of property, but in our opinion the mere absence of such a prayer makes no difference to the real nature of the suit. According to the agreement the plaintiff considers himself entitled not only to execution and registration of the sale deed of the property agreed to be sold, but also to possession. He does not make the latter claim because he says he is in possession. The case of Deonandan Prasad Singh v. Janki Singh (3) shows that there may be a suit for specific performance of a contract without any prayer for possession. Plaintiff in the present case asks that the sale to him should be completed and his suit is therefore undoubtedly one for specific performance of a contract. The alternative relief sought by him is the larger one, and the lower Appellate Court was not right in its view that the alternative relief was less than that for restoration of the original deed of sale, if still in existence. Counsel for the respondent is unable to cite any authority in support of his argument that the lower Appelate Court's decision is correct.

We accept the appeal and reversing the order of the District Judge restore that of the Trial Court rejecting the plaint with costs to defendant-appellant in all the Courts.

PAHLUMAL UKERMAL AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Bombay Land Revenue Code (Act V of 1879), ss. 86, 87, order under—Suit to set aside order, maintainability of—Civil Courts, jurisdiction of.

The object of sections 86 and 87 of the Bombay Land Revenue Code is to enable superior holders to recover rent or land revenue expeditiously when their title is clear, by a written application to the Collector, but the orders passed on such applications are neither decrees nor have they the force of a decree. They are purely executive orders and the Civil Courts have no right to sit in judgment upon them. [p. 955, col. 2.]

A party dissatisfied with such an order may file a suit in the Civil Court, not to set aside the order, but the superior holder to recover such amount as he may deem still due to him and the inferior holder to recover the amount levied from him in excess of what was due. [p. 956, col 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Joint Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Tahilram Maniram, for the Appellant.

Mr. Tolasing Khushalsing, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Mir Budho Khan was the Jagirdar of certain land in Deh Vagoori which he had leased to the respondent (defendant) Pahlumal Ukermal. Two survey numbers of the Jagir land had been let for cultivation for 1916-17 to Hot Khan appellant plaintiff by Usman deceased who was the maurusi hari thereof. In his plaint Hot Khan stated that he paid Rs. 12 as lapo for the two survey numbers and the other dues were payable according to the usage prevailing in the jagir but that the lessee Pahlumal insisted on enhanced rates and made a written application to the Mukhtiarkar under section 86, Bombay Land Revenue Code, asking for assistance in recovering dues at certain rates from him and an order was passed thereon in Pahlumal's favour. Plaintiff's prayer in his plaint was for a declaration that the decree (sic) obtained by Pahlumal at the hands of the Mukhtiarkar under section 86, Land Revenue Code, was null and void and for an injunction to Pahlumal restraining him from executing the decree. The Sub-Judge after hearing lengthy evidence as to the usage prevalent in the jagir in respect of rates of payment of the various land dues, came to the conclusion that the decision of the Mukhtiarkar in acceding to the application of Pahlumal was erroneous and directed it to be set aside. On appeal the District Court of Hydrabad was of opinion that the trial Court was not competent to set aside an order passed under section 86 of the Land Revenue Code and that the suit could not be entertained in the form in which it was brought and allowing the appeal, dismissed the plaintiff's suit. He now comes before us on second appeal.

The object of sections 86 and 87 of the Land Revenue Code is to enable superior holders to recover rent or land revenue expeditiously when their title is clear, by a written application to the Collector, but the orders passed on such applications are neither decrees nor have they the force of a decree. There can be no doubt in the present case as to Pahlumal being the superior holder as the lessee of the Jagir land and entitled in that capacity to recover the land revenue, whereas Hotkhan was the inferior holder. It was, therefore, quite open to Pahlumal to seek assistance of the Revenue Officer in the form prescribed by section 86. But the order of the Mamlatdar on Pahlumal's application was in no way conclusive. Clause 4 of section 87 states in clear terms. "Nothing in this section shall prevent either party from having recourse to the Civil Courts to recover from the other, such amount as he may deem to be still due to him, or to have been levied from him in excess of what was due, as the case may be." There was no necessity, therefore, for Hotkhan, though the Mamlatdar's order was adverse to him, to sue to set it aside, nor was he estopped by the order from having recourse to a Civil Court. The suit, therefore, to have the Mamlatdar's order set aside was misconceived, the Mamlatdar's order may be right or wrong, but it is purely an executive order and the Civil Courts have no right to sit in judgment upon it. In terms of section 87 the Collector or any Revenue Officer to whom powers under section 87 are delegated, on an application under section 86, does one of two things, if he finds that the question at issue between the parties complicated or difficult, he refuses the assistance sought but if the question is simple he grants it. The party dissatisfied with his order may then file a suit in the Civil Court, not to set aside his order, but the superior holder to recover such amounts as he may deem still due to him, and the inferior holder to recover the amount "levied" from him in excess of what was due." The latter's suit, therefore, becomes one "for the recovery of moneys had and received." But the plaintiff Hotkhan has come to Court to have the order of the Mamlatdar cancelled and the Subordinate Court has given him a declaration setting aside the Mamlatdar's order which he had no jurisdiction to do. No doubt Hotkhan apprehended that after the Mamlatdar's order, the next step would be to recover from him land revenue in excess of what he contended was due, and in resorting to a Civil Court he was prompted by the natural desire to stay execution of the order. But in terms of section 87 his cause of action arises when a sum in excess of what he contends is due is levied from him. It is at this stage permissible to him to have recourse to the Civil Courts, not for cancelling or amending the order of the Revenue Officer, but for the refund of the amount levied from him in excess of what was actually due.

We, therefore, dismiss this appeal but in the circumstances of the case we direct each party to bear his own costs on this appeal.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. VIII, r. 2—Limitation, plea of—Omission to state facts—General plea, effect of—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 89—Failure to render accounts—Refusal to render accounts

The plea of limitation is a plea in bar of the suit and unless the necessary facts are stated by the defendant in the written statement to raise a substantive defence of limitation, a general statement that the suit is barred by limitation means that on the face of the plaint the suit is so barred. [p. 957, col. 1.]

The question whether the failure of an agent to render accounts amounts to a refusal within the meaning of Art. 89 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act depends upon the circumstances of each case [p. 957, col. 2.]

The "putting off" of the rendering of accounts by an agent is equivalent to postponement and postponement implies an admission that the account is due and will be rendered. [p. 957, col. 2.]

Appeal against a decision of the Officiating Subordinate Judge, Patna, dated the 21st December 1920.

Messrs. S.M. Mullick and Shiveshwar Dayal, for the Appellants.

Messrs. L. N. Singh and Syed Nurul Hassan, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.

Ross, J.—The learned Subordinate Judge has dismissed the major part of the plaintiffs' claim for accounts against the defendant on ground of limitation. The defendant was the Tahsildar of Karanpura, a village in the estate represented by the plaintiffs from 1900 until the 14th December 1917. The suit was brought on the 5th December 1919. The learned Subordinate Judge has limited the account to the year 1917, and the plaintiffs file the present appeal.

HASAN IMAM v. DEBI PRASAD SINGH

The suit is governed by Article 89 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act. The period of 3 years limited by that Article begins to run when the account is, during the continuance of the agency, demanded and refused, or, where no such demand is made, when the agency terminates. Time would, therefore, begin to run in the present case from the 14th December 1917, unless during the continuance of the agency an account was demanded and refused. The material parts of the pleadings on his question are as follows. In paragraph 5 of the plaint it is said that.

"Some days before he was dismissed the Rai Saheb asked him to render account; but he went on putting off the matter from day to day and did always promise that he would render account."

Paragraph 1 of the written statement is that the suit has not been properly framed and is barred by limitation, and in paragraph 10 it is said that on the expiry of the year this defendant used to render accounts. Now the plea of limitation is a plea in bar and there are no facts stated to raise a substantive defence of limitation. Therefore, paragraph 1 of the written statement must be read as meaning that on the face of the plaint the plaintiffs' suit is barred. This plea manifestly fails because the allegation in the plaint is that the defendant promised to render accounts. Moreover, the substantive defence, which has been disbelieved by the learned Subordinate Judge, is that in fact accounts were rendered. In the words of the Judicial Committee in Nobin Chandra v. Chandra Maldab (1).

"The statement of objections on the part of respondent does not allege that there has been any demand and refusal of accounts."

The learned Subordinate Judge, however, has based his decision on certain statements of the plaintiffs' witnesses. Plaintiffs' witness No. 3 said in cross-examination.

"Before the trust, defendant was asked several times to render accounts but I cannot give any exact idea of the demand, it may be 5 or 6 years before. I think some Parwana was sent to him to render accounts. In my presence defendant was asked to render accounts some time."

In re-examination he said,

"Defendant was asked to render account repeatedly and he put it off but never refused to render account."

Plaintiff's witness No. 5 also says that

"Defendant was asked to render account but he went on putting off the matter."

If it is open to the defence to raise this substantive plea of limitation on these statements of the plaintiffs' witnesses, the effect of these statements must be taken to be merely this; that demands were made and the defendant put the matter off. The learned Subordinate Judge has relied upon Madusudan Sen v. Rukhal Chandra Das (2). In that case the defendant was called upon to explain his papers and did not respond to the call. Apparently he did nothing and kept silent and this was construed as a refusal. In Bhabatarini Debi v. Sheikh Bahadur Sarkar (3), it was pointed out that the question whether the failure of an agent to render accounts amounts to a refusal within the meaning of Article 89, depends upon the circumstances of each case. In my opinion there was in this case no refusal by the defendant. The expression 'putting off' has been interpreted by this Court in Nawab Choudhury v. Lok Nath Singh (4), as equivalent to postponement, and postponement is by no means tantamount to refusal, on the contrary it implies an admission that an account is due and will be rendered.

In my opinion, therefore, limitation in this case runs from the date of the termination of the agency and the suit is within time.

On the merits of the case it was argued on behalf of the respondent that the defendant had actually submitted accounts, and referene was made to the evidence. This matter has been fully discussed by the learned Subordinate Judge and his reasoning is so convincing that it is unnecessary to go into the evidence. All the proofs that might have been expected to be forthcoming if accounts had in fact been rendered are absent in this case; and the learned Vakil for the respondent did not meet any

I would, therefore, decree this appeal and decree the plaintiff's suit in full. There will be a preliminary decree for accounts from 1307 to Ajhun 1324, instead of for the limited period allowed by the Subordinate Judge, and the Commissioner will take the accounts for the entire period claimed.

The power conferred by O. In a suit to recover damages for wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff by the directors of the defendant Company in the alleged exercise by them of the powers conferred on them by the agreement of service entered into by the plaintiff, the plaintiff cannot call upon the defendant for a statement of particulars of the reasons why the directors considered the plaintiff unsuitable, or adduce evidence to show that these reasons were wrong or in sufficient and cannot ask the Court to substitute itself for the directors to decide how far these reasons were good, bad or indifferent. All that he can ask the Court in cases of this character is whether the action of the directors was an honest and bona fide exercise of their powers under the agreement. [p. 960, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—Suit for damages. By an agreement, dated the 8th September 1919, the defendants Messrs. Charles Booth & Co., engaged the plaintiff L. Collins for a period ending on 31st May 1924 to assist them in their business in India and in particular to create and manage branch establishments in Karachi and Amritsar, on a salary of Rs. 2,500 per mensem plus 15 per cent of the net profits earned by the Amritsar and Karachi branches. Under clause 11 of the agreement the defendants were entitled to put an end to this agreement at any time by giving the plaintiff three months' notice in writing if the directors of the Company considered the plaintiff unsuitable for his duties. On the 2nd November 1920, the defendants gave the plaintiff a notice, Ex. A, filed with the written statement determining his services....On 19th November 1920, the plaintiff filed his present suit claiming Rs. 70,000 from the defendants for breach of the agreement. The defendants demand particulars as to how this amount is made up on the ground that they are not specific. But apparently the plaintiff's salary alone at the rate in the agreement from 1st February 1920 to 31st May 1924 amounts to more than seventy thousand rupees.

The defendants contend inter alia that their action was within their powers under Cl. II and the plaint discloses no cause of action and the suit must, therefore, fail.

COLLINS v. CHARLES BOOTH & CO., LTD

The following issues were framed :—

1. Whether the suit is not maintainable by reason of the defendants being sued as Charles Booth & Co., Ltd, incorporated in India having its registered office at Calcutta by their manager of Karachi branch whoever he may be residing in Karachi ?

2. Whether the plaint discloses no cause of action and the suit is not maintainable ?

3. Whether the plaintiff is entitled to particulars as to why the directors of the defendants considered the plaintiff unsuitable for his duties within the meaning of Cl. II of the agreement between the parties ?

4. Whether the defendants were guilty of breach of contract by their action on 2nd November, 1920 ?

5. To what damages, if any, is the plaintiff entitled ?

6. General.

Issues Nos. 1, 2 and 3 were set down for preliminary hearing at the request of the defendants and have been argued and I proceed to record my findings on them particularly on issue No. 2.

As regards the first issue the plaintiff has amended the description of the defendants in the plaint and the defendants have consented to this course. The first issue, therefore, does not remain and is struck off.

Issue No. 2.—The question in this issue is whether the plaint discloses no cause of action and whether the suit should, therefore, be dismissed under O. VII, r. 11. The Court has had the benefit of exhaustive arguments on the question of law as between master and servant and dismissal and damages. These arguments are, however, really directed towards issue No. 4 rather than towards the second issue. It is admitted that the defendants gave the plaintiff the notice Ex. A on the 2nd November 1920 and terminated his service. The plaintiff contends that their action in these two respects was not legally justified and did not fall within their powers under Cl. II of the agreement. The defendants contend that it did. It appears to me clear that whatever the facts and the law in favour of each party and whatever the ultimate conclusion, in cases such as the present one, the plaintiff must be allowed to lead evidence and prove his case. The present case is hardly one in which it can be said that the plaint discloses no cause of action, and the defendants are not justified in asking the Court to reject the plaint. In fact even upon the arguments of the defendants, the plaintiff would be entitled to two months' salary and fifteen per cent. commission for three months from the date of notice. The salary for November was paid to the plaintiff on the 30th November. As regards the salary for December and January, the defendants allege that they were willing to pay and have deposited it in Court and the plaintiff has withdrawn the amount. As regards commission the defendants contend that the Karachi and Amritrar branches show no profit, but a loss, therefore, the plaintiff is not entitled to any sum in respect of commission. Accepting for a moment the truth of this allegation for the defendants, the fact remains that on the date of the plaint, the plaintiff by the defendants' own admission remained entitled to three months' salary and account in respect of commission, if any, if he chose. It follows, therefore, that there was 'a cause' of action admittedly in respect of a portion at least of the period for which the plaintiff claims. In view of this finding it appears to me advisable not to go at length into the arguments on both sides, which as I have said above, are more appropriate in my opinion to issue No. 4 than to issue No. 2. The rule in England as far as I am aware has been as in India, viz, to exercise the powers under O. VII, r. 11 with great circumspection and only if the Court is satisfied that even if the plaintiff proves all the allegations of fact he sets forth in the plaint, he would still not be entitled to any relief whatever. Thus r. 4 of O. XXV of the Judicature Act gives the English Courts larger powers, as it provides firstly that a pleading may be struck off and secondly that it may be struck off on the ground that it discloses no reasonable cause of action. The rule was nevertheless not acted upon in Moore v. Lawson (1); and it has only been acted upon in plain and express cases. That was also the view adopted by Collins, M. R. in Fraser v. Pape (2). It was held by the Allahabad High Court in Raghubans Puri v. Jyotis Swarupa (3), that the rule in India does not justify the rejection of a plaint in part. It is further to be observed that the defendants did not ask for the trial of the fourth issue as a preliminary issue, and the Court cannot therefore be asked at this stage to express an opinion without evidence which the plaintiff desires to lead on the main point in issue between the parties, viz., whether the defendants' acts did or did not fall within their powers under Cl. II. I must, therefore, find on issue No 2 that the plaint discloses a cause of action and the suit is maintainable.

(3) 29 A. 325 ; A. W. N. (1907) 68.

On the third issue.—There has been a keen contest between the parties as to whether the defendants can be compelled by the plaintiff to furnish particulars of the grounds why the defendants professed to consider the plaintiff unsuitable for his duties. Whatever the case may be, in suits such as Alman v. Oppert (4) as regards the grounds which led the directors to make a false statement in the prospectus of a company the general rule is laid down by Astbury, J. in Weinberger v. Inglis (5) that "where the onus of establishing a positive or negative allegation lies upon the plaintiff, the Court will not order the defendant to give particulars of his traverse of that allegation." This view was confirmed by the Court of Appeal and was upheld in the House of Lords Weinberger v. Inglis (6) which held that the question in these cases was whether the defendants had bona fide exercised the discretion conferred upon them and were not shown to have acted arbitrarily or capriciously. Following the rule, I am of opinion that the plaintiff cannot call upon the defendants for a statement of particulars of the reasons why the directors considered the plaintiff unsuitable, or adduce evidence to show that these reasons were wrong or insufficient and cannot ask the Court to substitute itself for the directors to decide how far these reasons were good, bad or indifferent. All that he can ask the Court in cases of this character is whether the action of the defendant was an honest and bona fide exercise of their powers under Cl. 11 of the agreement : Cassel v. Inglis (7), Diggle v. Ogston Motor Co., (8). In the present case while the plaint does not admit that these reasons come within the powers of Cl. 11 there is no clear denial of bona fides in the plaint itself. In the course of arguments reference was made to a letter to the defendants from the plaintiff's counsel the day after the notice hinting apparently that the real motive of the defendants was to save their pockets by engaging a manager on smaller pay. That circumstance, however, does not alter the legal position nor does it entitle the plaintiff to call upon the directors of the Company to give particulars.

The only question which remains for me to consider after my finding in the negative on the third issue is whether the plaintiff should be granted an issue about the defendants' action other than issue No. 4.

The plaintiff's counsel desires to ask for an amendment of the plaint questioning the defendants' bona fides in the sense of his letter of the 3rd November. It appears preferable therefore to reserve the question of further issues until the plaintiff has put in the prayer for the amendment of the plaint and both sides have been heard on the point.

Mr. Jagan Nath, for the Appellants.

Mr. G. C. Narang, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The material facts of the case out of which the present second appeal arises are as follows:—

On the 18th March 1918 Ram Singh sold certain house property to Atma Ram and Janki Das. On the 16th July 1918 Janki Das sold his half share to Atma Ram and on the same day Atma Ram sold a portion of the property to Mukand Singh, defendant respondent, on the latter asserting his right of pre-emption. Ude Ram and another then brought the present suit for pre-emption of the part which Atma Ram had not sold to Mukand Singh. The first Court decreed the claim, and both the parties appealed to the District Judge who held that Mukand Singh, who had a right of pre-emption not having pressed his claim to the whole of the property sold, had lost his right as a pre-emptor and that the plaintiffs, therefore, could and should have sued for the whole of the property sold and that they were not entitled to pre-empt a part only. He accordingly dismissed the plaintiff's claim, and they have come up on second appeal to this Court.

It is common ground that the general rule is that the pre-emptor must take over the bargain as a whole, and that he is not entitled to sue for a part only, when he is entitled to sue for the whole. Ellis in his law of pre-emption, 4th Edition, points out at pages 147 et seq. that this general rule is limited to certain cases which he details. The present case does not appear to be covered by authority. Counsel for the respondents cites Fatteh Chand v. Nihal Singh (1) and Ralla v. Dayal (2), as authorities for the proposition that a pre-emptor cannot relinquish his claim to a part of the property sold, and that if in buying property to which he has a right of pre-emption he associates himself with a stranger who has not such a right, he loses his right of pre-emption. In accordance with these authorities it appears that Mukand Singh, who had a right to pre-empt the whole property, by taking only a portion from Atma Ram, lost his right of pre-emption and, therefore, the plaintiffs could have brought the present suit for the whole of the property sold. The question, however, is whether they were bound to sue for the whole of the property. Counsel for the appellants has cited the case of Sheobharos Rai v. Jiach Rai (3), in which Mahmood, J. said that the principle of denying the right of pre-emption except as to the whole of the property sold, is that by breaking up the bargain the pre-emptor would be at liberty to take the best portion of the property and leave the worst part of it with the vendee. He said that the rule applied only to those transactions which while contained in one deed, could not be broken up or separated, and that it should be limited to such transactions, and the reason of it does not exist where the shares sold are separately specified, and the sale to the stranger is distinct and divisible, though contained in the same deed as the sale to the co-sharers. In that case the sale was to persons having a right of pre-emption and to a stranger who had no such right, but the shares sold to each were distinctly specified and it was held that in such a case the suit could not be brought in regard to the portion of the property sold to the persons who had right of pre-emption. This case was followed in Ram Nath v. Badri Narain (4). Dr. Narang who appeared for the respondents admitted the force of these authorities, but said that they did not apply to the present case, because the original sale was not one of specified portions to Atma Ram and Mukand Singh. They are not on all fours with the present case, but in our opinion the principle of them should be made applicable to it. Atma Ram having himself broken up the property sold by parting with a portion of it to Mukand Singh who had a right of pre-emption has no grievance when the plaintiffs sue him for the remainder of the property. He would not gain anything by plaintiffs suing not only for the portion of the property left with him but also for that sold by him to Mukand Singh. This is not a case where the plaintiff is seeking to pick and choose part of the property in the possession of the vendee. The vendee himself having parted with a portion of the property does not suffer in any way whatsoever by plaintiffs not suing for the whole of it. The reason for the rule that the pre-emptor must take over the whole of the property sold no longer exists. The giving of a decree to the plaintiffs will not involve any breaking up of the bargain as understood in the law of pre-emption because it has already been broken up by Atma Ram himself in selling a portion of the property to Mukand Singh.

We, therefore, accept the appeal and setting aside the decree of the District Judge remand the case to him for redecision of the parties' appeals lodged in his Court. Stamp in this Court will be refunded and other costs will be costs in the cause.

Appeal from the decree of the Assistant Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Appellant.

Mr. Rupchand Billaram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the appeal are shortly as follows:—

The plaintiff Khemchand Ramdas is a bania of Shikarpur. Near him lived one Hajanshah

KHEMCHAND RAMDAS v. MOHSON SHAH

Hajanshah's family tree so far as is necessary to the purposes of this case is as follows :—

Hajanshah,
Defendant No. 3—Bibi Kezbanu. Defendant No. 1 Mian Mohsonshah Chulalshah.
Defendant No. 2.

On Hajanshah's death his house passed to his son Jahanshah who sold it to his mother the defendant No. 3 by a sale-deed dated 9th March 1907. Defendant No. 3 re-sold the house to plaintiff and his uncle Khiomal by a deed dated 29th February 1908. Afterwards the defendants Nos. 1 to 3 refused to vacate, so Khiomal and the plaintiff filed suit 297 of 1908 to eject them In the course of the suit Khiomal died. Since he and his nephew had been joint the suit came to be continued in the name of the plaintiff alone. But before it terminated plaintiff came to an agreement with the defendants. By this agreement the plaintiff reconveyed to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 the house. They on the other hand agreed,

(1) To sell the house to Khemchand and his heirs only ; if the sale occurred within five years the price would be Rs. 1,736 the price paid by the defendants. If the sale occurred after five years then the sale price would be fixed by certain persons named in the deed.

(2) The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were not to alienate the property to any one but Khemchand or his heirs unless they refused to buy.

(3) The defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were to live in the house themselves.

They were to sell the house as a whole and not piecemeal.

In February 1912, the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold half the house to defendant No. 3, by Ex. 65. On the 4th May 1912, she resold the said half to one Gopumal, defendant No. 4. The plaintiff hearing of the re-sale warned Gopumal of his rights with the result that the latter filed a suit to set aside the sale. The suit dragged on for some time until the defendant No. 3 accepted a reconveyance of the half house from the defendant No. 4. Thereafter the defendant No. 3 mortgaged the same half to defendants Nos. 5 and 9. On 6th October 1914, the plaintiff filed the present suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge of Shikarpur for specific performance of his agreement. On the 30th April 1915, the Sub-Judge, Mr. Akhund, found that the plaintiff had slept over his rights so as to disentitle him to equitable relief and dismissed the suit. The plaintiff appealed to the District Court. On the 5th January 1917, Mr. Tirithadas, the Assistant Judge, dismissed the appeal. He disagreed from the trial Judge's finding that the plaintiff had been guilty of laches but he held that the covenant was (1) void for remoteness and (2) that it was opposed to the provisions of section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act.

The plaintiff has come in second appeal here.

Mr. Dipchand has appeared for the appellant.

Mr. Rupchand for the respondents.

Now it must be admitted that on its face there is nothing in the agreement inequitable. The plaintiff had bought the house from the defendant No. 3, but could not get it from her. Sooner than carry on protracted legal proceedings, he agreed to reconvey it to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2, provided they promised him first refusal of it. In these circumstances we are disposed to scrutinize strictly the plea that the agreement was contrary to law. The two objections taken by the lower Appellate Court were (1) the covenant was void for remoteness, in that it operated not only in the lifetime of the plaintiff but for ever and (2) the covenant was not one merely to secure a right of pre-emption but imposed an absolute bar to sell a portion of the property.

Now section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act runs as follows :—

"Where property is transferred subject to a condition or limitation absolutely restraining the transferee or any person claiming under him from parting with or disposing of his interest in the property, the condition or limitation is void, except in the case of a lease where the condition is for the benefit of the lessor or those claiming under him, provided that property may be transferred to or for the benefit of a woman (not being a Hindu, Mahomadan or Buddhist), so that she shall not have power during her marriage to transfer or charge the same or her beneficial interest therein."

KHEMCHAND RAMDAS v. MOHSON SHAH

The question, therefore, before us is whether the resale by the plaintiff to the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 was subject to any condition or limitation absolutely restraining them or any persons claiming under them from parting with or disposing of their interest in the property. It is clear that it was not. On the contrary the sale-deed contemplated the transfer by the defendants of the property. The only condition imposed on them was that they should offer it to the plaintiff first for Rs. 1,736 the price at which he had himself sold it to the defendants. Now it has been held in Karim Baksh Khan v. Phula Bibi (1), that such a condition is not illegal. The learned Judge of the lower Court has relied on two cases in support of his view that the covenant was bad for remoteness: namely Rama Sami Pattar v. Chinnan Asari (2) and Nabin Chandra Soot v. Nabab Ali Sarkar (3). In our opinion neither of these cases supports his view. In Rama Sami Patter v. Chinnan Asari (2), the facts were widely different from those in the present case. In 1872, A. mortgaged some land to S. for Rs. 100. The mortgage-deed gave S. the right of pre-emption of the mortgagor's equity of redemption 1873, A. sold his equity to V. and from V. it passed to the plaintiff. When the plaintiff sued S. to redeem the mortgage, S. pleaded his covenant of pre-emption and contended that because of it the assignment to V. and and to the plaintiff were void. The learned Judges held that plaintiff was not a transferee with notice and that even if he had notice, as defendants could no longer bring a suit to enforce the contract, he could not use it as an answer to the plaintiff s claim.

Ayyangar, J. also held that the covenant of pre-emptionwas a clog on the equity of redemption and, therefore, inequitable. It is true that towards the end of their judgment both judges did refer to the question of perpetuity. But it is clear that their observations were obiter dicta and Ayyangar J., emphasised this by saying "I am glad to refrain from expressing any opinion on this difficult and important question of the application of the doctrine of perpetuities to covenants, as it has not been really argued in this case." In the case of Nobin Chandra Soot and Nabab AliSarkar (3), a certain Ramkissan sold some land to plaintiff. Subsequently the plaintiff reconveyed to Ramkissan the land in suit for Rs. 25 on condition that if he had to part with it he should retransfer it to them for the same price. If they refused the land, he could then be at liberty to sell it to others. After Ramkissan's death his son the defendant No. I sold the suit land to certain strangers in spite of the plaintiff's demand that he should sell it to them. The judges held that the covenant was void for remoteness because it sought to bind the heirs. It is true that here the covenant also seeks to bind the heirs of the parties. But the heirs are not in Court. It is the original parties who are before us. The finding, therefore, of their Lordships in Nobin Chandra Soot and Nabab Ali Sarkar (3) is not on all fours with the present litigation.

On the other hand there is the case of South Eastern Railway Company v. Associated Portland Cement Manufacturers (4). There a Railway Company bought a strip of land from a landed proprietor on the understanding that the vendor, his heirs or assigns might at any time make a tunnel under the railway line. When the heirs of the landed proprietor wished to make a tunnel the Railway Company invoked the aid of the law against perpetuities. But the learned Judges brushed aside the plea on the ground that the Railway Company was the living covenantor and that in a suit against the covenantor, the question of perpetuities did not arise. That as it seems to us, is exactly the position here.

We now come to the second point namely whether the covenant was void because to use the words of the learnrd Judge it imposed an absolute bar to sell a portion of the property. The wording of the agreement and of the sale-deed is certainly somewhat vague. But all parties admit that the covenant imposes on the defendants the obligation to sell the house as a whole or not at all. Here again let us consider whether this condition was inequitable. Surely not. The plaintiff had no objection to the defendants as neighbours, but when he re-sold the house to them he wished to ensure himself against their selling it to other less desirable persons. So he got them to agree that they would before selling it to any one else offer it to him for Rs. 1,736 and also to agree, so that their previous covenant should not be defeated, not to sell the house by bits. Mr. Rupchand has urged that the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 were each restrained absolutely from selling their half share of the house. But they had no separate share of the house. It is clear that they were joint owners. They jointly sold half of the house to the defendant No. 3. They were however, restrained from selling the house piecemeal. Was that a violation of section 10? We do not think so. They were in no way restrained from selling the house as a whole. They were only restrained from selling it in a particular way.

Mr. Rupchand has further pressed on the Court the view that the suit was time-barred. The suit came, according to him, under article 10 of the Limitation Act. But in our opinion the suit comes under article 113, being a suit for specific performance of a contract. The contract between the parties does not give a mere right of pre-emption. It includes a number of other terms as well. Article 113 allows three years. The cause of action arose at the earliest when the defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold half their house to defendant No. 3, in February 1912. The amended plaint was filed in the Shikarpur Sub-Court on 26th October 1914. The learned Sub-Judge has found that the plaintiff was guilty of laches. But this finding has been set aside by the Court of the 1st Appeal. We may add, that to this finding we agree.

Mr. Rupchand has lastly urged that if the present suit be deemed to be a suit for specific performance, then it is open to the Court to grant damages. But we are of opinion that if the plaintiff has done all that was incumbent on him to do, damages would not be a sufficient compensation to the plaintiff. He has all along been anxious to keep the house in suit free from undesirable neighbours. He first bought it. Then when he could not get possession of it through the action of the vendor, he compromised with them and reconveyed the house to defendant on the condition that they lived in it themselves or that if they wanted to sell it they should sell it to him. When defendants Nos. 1 and 2 sold half of the house to defendant No. 3, he took no exception to the transaction because, although it violated the letter of their agreement, the defendant No. 3 was the mother-in-law of defendant, No. 2, and therefore, one of the family. When the defendant No. 3 re-sold the half to defendant No. 4, the plaintiff threatened legal steps and forced the defendant No 4 to reconvey the half share to defendant No. 3. When the defendant No. 3 mortgaged the property to defendants No. 5 and 9 the plaintiff brought the present suit. It is clear that the plaintiff's only wish is to keep his own house free from undesirable neighbours and that the only way to gratify that wish is to allow him specific performance of his contract.

It has, however, been urged that the defendants called on the plaintiff by means of certain notices to buy the house and that he did not do so.

In these circumstances we remand the case for trial to the first Court, of the issue:—

Was an offer made to the plaintiff by the defendant No. 3 to take the house in mortgage or by way of sale? Did he refuse to do so? If so was he justified in refusing and what was the effect on his claim for specific performance?

Messrs. L. De Gruyther, K. C., and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellants.

Sir G. Lowndes, K. C., and Mr. E. B. Raikes, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by Musammat Durga Devi and her minor son Kali Sahai, two of the defendants to the suit, from a decree, dated the 10th March, 1916, of the Chief Court of the Punjab, which reversed a decree, dated the 31st July 1914, of the District Judge of Amritsar, which had dismissed the suit. The respondents are Shambhu Nath, who is the plaintiff in the suit, and Arjan Singh and Nathu Mal, who are two of the defendants to the suit and have taken no part in this appeal or in the litigation.

DEVI DAS=. . . .

Kashmiri Brahmin

Hari Ram=. . . .

Two sons.

Shambhu Nath, third son, alleged to have been adopted by Ram Chand after the death of Amar Nath, Plaintiff, respondent.

Ram Chand=. . . .

Amar Nath =Indrani, adopted son. Died July, 1918. Died in the life-time of Ram Chand, sonless.

Durga Devi=Manohar Nath a defendant, Appellant.

Kali Sahai, a minor, a defendant, appellant.

The suit was brought in the Court of the District Judge of Amritsar on the 21st October, 1913, for a decree for the possession of two houses, a well, a kothri and a shop in Amritsar, of which the plaintiff alleged that he, as the adopted son of Ram Chand, was the owner. His case is that he was adopted by Pandit Ram Chand in September 1896, who was the owner of the property in question, and died on the 13th July, 1897. The case of the defendants Durga Devi and Kali Sahai, her minor son, is that plaintiff was not adopted by Ram Chand and that the suit is barred by the law of limitation. The other two defendants, who have no title if the plaintiff is the adopted son of Ram Chand and is not debarred from maintaining the suit by the law of limitation, did not defend the suit and were, by an amendment of the decree of the Chief Court, made not liable for costs.

It will be convenient to consider whether Shambhu Nath was validly adopted by Ram Chand before considering whether Shambhu Nath's suit is barred by the law of limitation.

Shambhu Nath was the third son of Hari Ram, a brother of Ram Chand. They belonged to a family of Brahmins which came from Kashmir and settled in Amritsar in the Punjab, and section 5 of Act IV of 1872, the Punjab Laws Act, 1872, as amended, applied to that family of Kashmiri Brahmins. By that section it is, so far as is material to this suit and appeal, enacted as follows :—

"5. In questions regarding succession, . . . adoption...or any religious usage, . . . the rule of decision shall be—

(a) any custom applicable to the parties concerned, which is not contrary to justice, equity or good conscience and has not been by this or any other enactment altered or abolished, and has not been declared to be void by any competent authority ;

(b) the Muhammadan law, in cases where the parties are Muhammadans, and the Hindu law, in cases where the parties are Hindus, except in so far as such law has been altered or abolished by legislative enactment, or is opposed to the provisions of this Act, or has been modified by such custom as is above referred to."

The adoption alleged in this suit to have been made was an adoption applicable by custom to the family of Kashmiri Brahmins to which Ram Chand Shambhu Nath belonged, and had not been altered or abolished or declared to be void.

At the date of the alleged adoption Shambhu Nath was 17 years old and he had been invested with the sacred thread, that is the ceremony of Upanayna had already been performed upon him. There was no evidence as to what school of Hindu law Kashmiri Brahmins living in Kashmir are subject to, and it has not been suggestd that this family of Kashmiri Brahmins was living in the Punjab subject to any school of Hindu law peculiar to Kashmir. They were, however, Brahmins by caste, and consequently were Hindus of a twice born class.

In considering whether a family custom as to adoption was proved in this suit, it is advisable to bear in mind what Lord Buckmaster said in delivering the judgment of the Board in Abdul Hussein Khan v. Bibi Sona Dero, (1) as to the proof of family customs in India. Afther pointing out that it is incumbent upon a plaintiff to allege and prove the custom upon which he relies, Lord Buckmaster said :—

> "Their Lordships have carefully considered the difficuty of applying all the strict rules that govern the establishment of custom in this country to circumstances which find no analogy here. Custom binding inheritance in a particular family has long been recognized in India (see Soorendronath Roy v. Heeramonee Burmoneah (2), although such a custom is unknown to the law of this country, and is foreign to its spirit. Customs affecting descent in certain areas or customs affecting rights of inhabitants of a particular district are perhaps the nearest analogies in this country. But in England, if a custom were alleged as applicable to a particular district, and the evidence tendered in its support proved that the rights claimed had been enjoyed by people outside the district, the custom would fail. This principle, however, it seems to their Lordships, ought not to be applied in considering such a custom as the one claimed here, since, if the custom were in fact well established in one particular family, whether it were enjoyed or not by another family, would not affect the question, since the custom might be independent in each case, and the evidence would not establish that the custom failed by reason of the inability to define the exact limits within which it was to be found when once it was established that, within certain and definite limits, it undoubtedly existed."

There are concurrent findings of the Trial Judge and the Chief Court that Shambu Nath was in fact adopted by Ram Chand, and there was evidence upon which those Courts could so find, and those findings as to the factum of the adoption must be accepted as conclusive. Each Court also found that the adoption was valid but apparently for different reasons. The Trial Judge apparently relied for his finding that the adoption was valid, not upon the evidence as to custom, but upon a judgment of the Bombay High Court in Lakshmappa v. Ramava (3), to which this family of Kashmiri Brahmins were not parties. He also referred to Trevelyan's Hindu Family Law, edition of 1908, page 148. He did not, however, express any opinion that on the evidence before him in this suit the adoption was invalid. He, however, dismissed the suit on the ground set up by Musammat Durga Devi and her son in their written statement that the suit was barred by the law of limitation. He dismissed the suit without costs. From that decree Shambhu Nath and Musammat Durga Devi and her son appealed. The Chief Court found on the evidence that by the custom of this family the adoption was valid, and that the suit was not barred by limitation, and decreed the suit with costs. The Chief Court dismissed the appeal of Musammat Durga Devi and her son with costs.

Shambhu Nath, the plaintiff, did not in his plaint state in what particular form he had been adopted by Ram Chand, but he alleged in his plaint that he was the adopted son of Ram Chand, and that Ram Chand, son of

DURGA DEVI v. SHAMBHU NATH

Pandit Devi Das, by caste a Kashmiri Pandit, resident of Amritsar, had been the owner of the property, specified in his plaint, in respect of which he, Shambhu Nath, claimed a decree for possession. As Shambu Nath had been adopted in September 1896, openly and in the presence of many members of the brotherhood, the form of his adoption must have been perfectly well known in the family and by Musammat Durga Devi. In the written statement which she filed in the suit on behalf of herself and her son, she confined herself so far as the question of Shambhu Nath's adoption was concerned, to a simple denial that Shambhu Nath was the adopted son of Ram Chand. On those pleadings Shambhu Nath was, in order to succeed in his suit, bound to prove that he had been validly adopted.

On behalf of Shambhu Nath several witnesses were called, most of whom were members of the Biradri, and all of whom, so far as appears, were persons of respectability. Some of them who were members of the Biradri lived in Amritsar, others lived in Lahore. Ram Chand was a Guru, that is a religious teacher and spiritual guide amongst these Kashmiri Brahmins of Amritsar, and was obviously much respected, and he must have known what were the essentials to a valid adoption in the family to which he belonged. As has already been mentioned Shambhu Nath was 17 years old when the adoption took place, and he had been then already invested with the sacred thread; those are facts which must have been known by the members of the Biradri and by other friends of the family who attended the adoption, several of whom gave evidence in support of his case.

It is not suggested that any one who attended the adoption had questioned in any way the right to validly adopt in this family a boy or young man who had previously been invested with the sacred thread. Not one question was put in cross-examination of any witness for the plaintiff to suggest that Shambhu Nath could have not been validly adopted because he had been previously invested with the sacred thread, and the cross-examination of the plaintiff's witnesses was directed to make out a case that the adoption was invalid by reason of Shambhu Nath having been 17 years old when the adoption took place. There was abundant evidence that there was no limit of age for a valid adoption in this family, and the contention that there was a limit of age within which a valid adoption could be made in this family was subsequently abandoned. After the plaintiff's evidence had been closed, some witnesses were called on behalf of Musammat Durga Devi and her son, who, if their evidence was believed, proved that a boy of 17 years of age could not be adopted.

One of the witnesses for the defendants—appellants was Kishori Lal, a Kashmiri Pandit of Delhi. He stated that "a boy who has gone through his janaoo ceremonies (ceremonies of investiture with the sacred thread) can never be adopted," and "we follow Mitakshara." It may be mentioned with regard to his evidence that the Chief Court of the Punjab had held in Maharaj Narain v. Banoji (4), that Kashmiri Brahmins of the Delhi District were proved to be governed in matters of adoption by custom and not by the principles of the Mitakshara form of Hindu Law.

Another witness for the defendants appellants was Mohan Lal, a Kashmiri Brahmin of Lahore He stated that "a boy who has gone through the janaoo ceremony cannot be adopted," and "we follow Dharam Shastar in matter of janaoo and adoption"; he further stated "according to Hindu Law janaoo ceremonies cannot be performed after the age of 11 or 12 years. I do not know whether there is any age restriction as regards adoption. I have not read the Hindu Law." It is not necessary for their Lordships to consider what is the law of Mitakshara or of the Dharma-Sutras, as the question on which this suit depended is one as to a custom of adoption in this family of Kashmiri Brahmins. The plaintiff was not entitled to call rebutting evidence on the question of adoption as his case as to the alleged adoption had been closed.

After a careful consideration of the evidence their Lordships have come to the conclusion that Shambhu Nath was validly adopted by Ram Chand. His adoption was recognised as valid by Biradri and by the friends of the family, and so far as appears its validity was not questioned by any one from 1896 until the present dispute arose in 1913. When Ram Chand died, his brother Hari Nath and two elder sons of Hari Nath were living, but it was Shambhu Nath who performed the funeral obsequies of Ram Chand and of Ram Chand's widow, and on Ram Chand's death Shambhu Nath succeeded him as the Guru. It was Shambu Nath who gave Musammat Durga Devi away in marriage, and it was Shambhu Nath who paid the not inconsiderable expenses of the marriage.

The contention of the appellants that this suit is barred by the law of limitation on the ground that Mussammat Umraoti, the widow of Ram Chand, and Mussammat Indrani, and after her Mussammat Durga Devi held adverse possession of the property in suit for more than 12 years was, in the circumstances of the case, in their Lordships' opinion, an impudent and unfounded contention of the appellants. The family house at Amritsar was naturally the proper place in which Umraoti, Indrani and Durga Devi until her marriage should live. Shambhu Nath permitted them as female members of the family to live in that house. He had obtained employment at Lahore in the service of the railway company. The rents of the property at Amritsar were trifling and he allowed Umraoti, Indrani and Durga Devi to enjoy these rents for their maintenance as female members of this family. There was no 12 years' adverse possession of any of the property in suit.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

JUDGMENT.—Tyabali Abdul Hussain carries on business in Karachi in the name of Alibhai Mamuji and deals extensively in sugar. One Hassonand is a sugar Broker of James Finlay & Co. Tayabali alleges that in the early part of August 1921, Hassanand on behalf of Finlay asked him whether he would purchase 400 tons of white Java sugar and 100 tons of Brown Java sugar at Rs. 23-12-0 per cwt., for the former and Rs. 20-14-0 for the latter. Tayabali requested that the rate for the white Sugar should be reduced to Rs. 23-8-0 that being the rate at which he had purchased white sugar that day and the rate for the Brown sugar to Rs. 20-8-0. Hassanand said in reply that he should agree to the rate named by him for the white sugar and that he would have the price for the Brown sugar reduced by about six to eight annas. Tayabali consented and within an hour, Hassanand brought him a form for his signature which is headed " Memorandum " and is addressed by Alibhai Mamuji to James Finlay & Co. and is Ex. 6 in the case. Considering its importance it is desirable to reproduce its contents which are as follows : –

" We shall thank you to telegraph to your friends in England to purchase the following on our account, for reply by 10 o'clock tomorrow night, subject to the conditions of your indent forms:

400 tons of White Java sugar at Rs. 23-12-0 November, December equally.

100 tons of Brown Java sugar at Rs. 20-8-0 November, December equally."

This memo was signed by Tayabali and is dated the 10th August 1911. Tayabali's case is that he contracted for the purchase of both the White and Brown Java sugar on the inducement held out to him by Hassanand that the higher rate for the White Java was compensated for by the lower rate for the Brown Java. On the 11th August 1921, that is the day following Ex. 6, Finlay addressed to Tayabali a " Sugar Acceptance Notice " wherein they informed him of the acceptance of his offer for 400 tons of the White Java only " subject to the confirmation of our telegram and to the terms of the agreement which we shall call upon you to sign in due course as usual." On the 12th August, the pleaders of Tayabali wrote to Finlay, Ex. 8, with reference to their acceptance notice, pointing out that the offer of their client was for both the White and Brown Java sugar, and it was not open to Finlay to accept the one without accepting the other, and further, it was alleged that as the acceptance was conditional, it amounted to a counter offer which their client could not accept. It is significant to observe that there is no reference in Ex. 8 to any fraudulent representation on the part of the broker Hassanand or to any inducement held out by him prior to Tayabali appending his signature to Ex. 6. Finlay replied to Ex. 8 through their pleader stating that there were two separate offers for white and brown and that their clients were justified in accepting the one and not the other, and that their acceptance was by no means conditional. They urged that Tayabali was bound by the contract for the purchase of white Java sugar and that the usual indent would be sent to him for his signature, and arrival notice would be given to him on the arrival of the shipments. They add that the reason for Tayabali attempting to back out of the contract was the fall in the market rate, Ex. 9. On the 15th August, Ex. 10, plaintiffs' pleaders reiterate their reasons already advanced repudiating the contract and mention that the broker held out an inducement to their client to purchase both the qualities of the sugar and that the contract for both was but one "written on the same paper and over one signature." Finlays denied the inducement and contended that as the offers related to different kinds of goods they were distinct offers. Ex. 11. There was no further correspondence between the parties till a month later when Finlay's pleaders wrote to the pleaders of Tayabali, Ex. 12, informing them that they were prepared owing to the decline of prices in the market to have the dispute between them referred immediately to arbitration before the arrival of the goods and invited their concurrence, but Tayabali's pleaders replied, Ex. 13, that as there was no contract between the parties they challenged the right of Finlay to proceed to arbitration. On the 26th November 1921, Ex. 15, notice of arrival of 200 tons of white Java was given to Tayabali who replied that they had nothing to do with the goods in question. Finlay then advised that they would resell the goods on their account and informed them of the resale on the 6th December 1921 at Rs. 18 per cwt. On the 13th December 1921. Finlay wrote to Taybali Ex. 19, enclosing a copy of an account showing the loss sustained by them on 200 tons of white Java which amounted to Rs. 24,723-6-3 which they called upon them to pay within 24 hours and in the event of their failure to nominate their arbitrator within eight days, giving them at the same time the name of their arbitrator. Tayabali's pleaders failed to nominate their arbitrator contesting the right of Finlay to proceed to arbitration, the latter accordingly nominated an arbitrator on behalf of Tayabali. A reference in favour of the arbitrators was executed by Finlays alone on the 27th December 1921, and the arbitrators duly fixed a date for the hearing, giving notice thereof to Tayabali who did not attend before them nor was represented, and on the 10th January 1922, passed their award for the aforesaid sum in favour of Finlay. A day previous to the award, that is, on the 9th January 192-, Tayabali filed a suit in this Court against Finlay praying for a declaration that there was no valid and binding contract between the parties in respect of the 400 tons white Java sugar, and in the alternative that the contract, if any, be declared void as having been induced by fraud; for a declaration that the parties have not agreed to refer their disputes to arbitration and for an injunction restraining Finlay from enforcing the contract or submitting disputes arising out of the alleged contract to arbitration.

On the 23rd December 1921, Finlay gave Tayabali notice of the arrival of the balance of 200 tons of white Java, Ex. 22, and as Tayabali adopted the identical attitude as in respect of the previous 200 tons these were also resold by public auction at Rs. 16/14 per cwt. A bill was submitted to Tayabali and the same procedure adopted with reference to arbitration, the reference being executed on the 31st January 1922. Again Tayabali failed to appear before the arbitrators who passed their award on the 7th February 1922 awarding Finlay the sum of Rs. 25,537-13-8 against Tayabali. On the 18th March 1922, Tayabali filed another suit in this Court wherein he asked for similar relief as in his previous suit with the additional prayer that both the awards be declared not binding upon him and set aside and cancelled and for an injunction restraining Finlay from enforcing them.

Meanwhile on the 16th January and 9th February 1923, the arbitrators presented two petitions in Court under the Indian Arbitration Act of 1899 for the two awards being made a rule of the Court and to these awards various objections were taken in more or less similar terms.

Subsequently an application under section 151, Civil Procedure Code was presented to the Court by the pleaders of Tayabali praying that in the interests of justice, and for the convenience of the parties, both the suits and the petitions to file the awards should be consolidated and heard together and after hearing the objections of the other side to this application I acceded to the prayer of the applicants, provided they gave security for the amounts awarded against them, with which order they complied.

The issues framed in the latter suit No. 262 of 1922 which virtually covered the whole ground in the previous suit No. 25 of 1922 and the objections raised to the petitions to file the two awards and which the pleaders for the respective parties have argued before me at considerable lenghth, are the following :—

(1) Is the suit as brought competent in view of the reasons given in para 1 of the written statement ?

(2) Is the suit for declaration and injunction not maintainable ?

(3) Is the plaint sufficiently stamped ?

(4) Was there an express agreement between the parties that both the white and brown sugar were to be sold by one and the same contract or was the offer for White Java sugar separate from that of brown Java sugar ?

(5) Was there no complete and binding contract between the parties for reasons given in paras. 1 to 4 A. of the written statement ?

(6) If there was a complete and binding contract, is the same voidable at plaintiff's instance for reasons given in paras. 1 to 5 of the plaint ?

(7) Did the plaintiff agree to submit to arbitration their disputes including the disputes whether there was a complete contract or not ?

(8) Had the defendants no right to refer the disputes to arbitration for reasons given in para. 6 of the plaint ?

(9) Are the two awards in Judl. Misc. Nos. 36 and 92 of 1912 or any of them null and void for reasons given in para. 13 of the plaint ?

(10) Is the plaintiff entitled to urge the contentions raised in clauses (d), (e), (f) and (g) of para. 13 of the plaint ?

(11) Is the plaintiff entitled to any, and if so, what relief ?

(12) General.

The first issue has not been pressed by Mr. Kimatrai who represented the defendants James Finlay & Co. and my finding on it on the evidence recorded is in the affirmative.

ISSUE 2—On the facts as set out above, plaintiff's allegation is that as the acceptance by the defendants was only of a part of the goods and was also conditional, the so-called acceptance was in the nature of a counter-offer which the plaintiff declined to accept, hence there was no contract between the parties ; and, further, even if there was a complete and binding contract with respect to the 400 tons white Java sugar the same was voidable by reason of fraud on the part of the defendants' broker. Whether the allegations have been substantiated or not is a point that I shall discuss later but plaintiff prays for a declaration that there is no valid and binding contract and consequently the awards are not binding upon him and for an injunction restraining the defendants from enforcing them. Mr. Kimatrai has argued that the suit for declaration and injunction as prayed for, is not maintainable. He relies principally on the case of Ram Kissen Joydoyal v. Pooran Mull (1) where " in a suit for a declaration that a certain contract entered into between plaintiffs and defendants was not binding on the plaintiffs inasmuch as they did not enter into such contract and that they were accordingly entitled to an injunction to restrain arbitration, it was held that no injunction could be claimed under section 54 of the Specific Relief Act, and further that the injunction claimed should not be granted under the provisions of section 56, cl. (1) which laid down that an injunction could not be granted when equally efficacious relief could be obtained by any other usual mode of proceeding." Mr. Kimatrai's contention was that the suit did not lie as there was a remedy open to the plaintiffs to have the award set aside under section 14, Indian Arbitration Act. The latest pronouncement on a suit of the nature which I am considering is the Privy Council case of Sassoon & Co. v. Ramdutt Ramkissen Das (2) where a suit was filed for a declaration that the award was void and for an injunction. It was held that the suit was maintainable as the award was objected on the grond of want of jurisdiction, not of misconduct or irregularity by the arbitrator, and accordingly an application under section 14 of the Act to set aside the award was not the only remedy open to the plaintiff, and further having regard to the relief sought, sections 42 and 56 of the Specific Relief Act constituted no bar to the suit. This is precisely the case here. Plaintiffs contend that there was no valid and binding contract and consequently the arbitrators had no jurisdiction to sit on judgment on the disputes between the parties which were said to arise out of the alleged contract. In Ram Kissen Joydoyal v. Pooran Mull (1) referred to above, plaintiffs asked for an injunction to restrain the defendants from proceeding with the arbitration, and this was the relief the plaintiff in this case sought in the first suitNo. 25 of 1922 which was a suit filed before either of the awards was made but in the second suit plaintiff seeks to have the awards set aside and for an injunction to restrain defendants from enforcing them. In Firm of Jai Narain Babulal v. Firm of Naraindas Janimal (3) "it was held that though a party dissatisfied with a private award may wait till his adversary seeks to enforce it by the summary process prescribed by the Indian Arbitration Act, and then contest it by filing such objections as are allowed by the law, that remedy is not his sole remedy and does not take away the remedy open to him under the provisons of section 9, Civil Procedure Code of bringing an action to set aside the award on the ground that no contract providing for a reference to arbitration was made or that the contract if made was not enforceable by reason of fraud or misrepresentation." Section 39 of the Specific Relief Act empowers a person against whom a written instrument is void or voidable to sue to have it adjudged void or voidable if he reasonably apprehends serious injury accruing from it if left outstanding; and in Vulley Mohomed v. Dattubhoy Hassam (4), an award was considered an instrument to which the provisions of section 39 could be applied. There can be little doubt that the plaintiff must entertain a reasonable apprehension that the award if left outstanding will cause him serious injury and as he contends that the award is either void or voidable, I fail to see any bar to his suit to have it declared ineffectual and to restrain defendants from enforcing it. I am of opinion that the suit is maintainable in the form in which it is brought and issue 2 must be answered in the affirmative.

With regard to issue 3 whether the plaint is sufficiently stamped, plaintiff has valued the suit as for cancellation of the two awards at Rs. 10 each and for the injunction and declaration at Rs. 1,000 and has paid a Court-fee of Rs. 95. The amount comprised in the two awards in Rs. 50,311-3-5. Plaintiff contends that under section 7, Cl. 4, sub-Cl. (e), the Court-fees have been correctly assessed. In Balkrishna Narayan Sawant v. Jankibai Sitaram Sauzgiri (5), it was held that in a suit for a declaration and for an injunction by way of consequential relief the plaintiff has the right to value his claim for the purposes of Court-fees, and the value for the purposes of jurisdiction is the same. In Arunachalam Chetty v. Rangaswamy Pillai (6), it was held by a Full Bench that a suit for a declaration that a mortgage-decree is not binding on the plaintiff and for an injunction restraining defendants from executing the same is a suit for a declaratory decree with consequential relief within the meaning of section 7, clause 4 (e), of the Court Fees Act and an ad valorem fee is payable on the valuation fixed in the plaint. Mr. Kimatrai relied on Sriram v. Dataram (7), where it was held, in a suit to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud and where no consequential relief had been prayed for, that plaintiff was bound to ask for the consequential relief for which he really applies and pays

Court-fees on the decretal amount which the plaintiff claims to avoid. Mr. Kimatrai, therefore, urged that in the present suit the Court-fees must be determined on the amounts involved in the two awards. The case in Sriram v. Dattaram (7), followed. Deokali Koer v. Kedar Nath (8), where it was held that "a Court-fee of Rs. 10 is not sufficient for suits that are not declaratory suits. in the proper sense of the term." In the latter case it was observed that the suit for a declaration could not be deemed such under section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and it was not a suit as sanctioned by law, whereas in the Sind Law Reporter case where the plaintiff had contented himself with asking for a bare declaration it was said that the real relief which the plaintiff sought was not limited to the declaration that he prayed for, but that it was incumbent on him to apply for consequential relief : but neither of these rulings lays down that if the plaintiff asks for declaration with consequential relief he is not justified in assessing the Court-fees according to the amount at which the relief sought is valued. My finding on issue 3 is in the affirmative.

Issues 4, 5 and 6 may conveniently be considered together. Plaintiff's case substantially is that he made but one offer for the contract in suit, for the 400 tons of White Java and 100 tons of the Brown Java sugar, they are both contained in but one document, and the broker Hassanand who took the offer invited it for both the qualities of the sugar at the same time, mentioning the rate at which the quantity would be available. Plaintiff states that he pressed for a reduction of the rates mentioned by the broker but the latter induced him to consent to the rate mentioned by him for the White Java and promised to secure a concession in the rate of the Brown Java. As to what actually transpired at this interview between the plaintiff and Hassanand we have only the evidence of the plaintiff on one side and that of Hassanand on the other. Hassanand states that on the night previous to the offer the Manager of James Finlay, Mr. Brachi asked him to sell 200 tons of White Java at Rs. 24-8-0 per cwt., and on Hassanand pointing out to him that the market was weak, he was told to bring firm offers from merchants at such rates as he could secure, the shipment being for November-December. On this, says the broker, he went to the plaintiff who offered to purchase 400 tons of White Java at Rs. 23-12-0 per cwt. After this offer was made Hassanand says that Tayabali stated he also required Brown sugar but did not mention either the quantity or the rate. On this according to Hassanand he told Tayabali he would speak to Finlay's Manager about it and if he agreed to wire for it he would take an offer from him. Then according to the broker he returned to the office of Finlay and informed the salesman in the sugar department, Patrick DeSouza of the firm offer for White Java and that the dealer was inclined to purchase Brown Java. The salesman took the broker to Brachi & Gilkes both of whom looked after the sugar business of the firm. The broker was told to bring the offer for the Brown Java and that Finlays would wire and try to get it. Hassanand then went to the plaintiff's Kothi and received an offer from him for 100 tons of Brown Java at Rs. 20-8-0 per cwt. On Hassanad returning with this offer Mr. DeSouza told him to bring the offers in writing and gave him one of the office forms on which the necessary entries were made in respect of both the qualities of sugar and the plaintiff's signature was taken. The broker repudiates the plaintiff's assertion that there was any agreement that the offer for the White and Brown sugar was to be reckoned as but one offer or that the offer for the White sugar was made as the broker offered to sell the Brown at a rate lower than the market rate. Now, though the plaintiff's statement that he was inveigled into the contract rests on his assertion alone, the broker's evidence has a certain amount of corroboration. DeSouza states that the broker told him on the 10th August that plaintiff had made an offer for white Java at Rs. 23-1½-0 per cwt. November-December shipments subject to reply the following day by 10 P. M. when the salesman took him to Mr. Gilkes and after this offer was mentioned to the latter, the broker said that the plaintiff was also inclined to purchase Brown Java and Gilkes asked the broker to bring an offer and he would try. Gilkes states in his evidence that the broker brought an offer for

(8) 15 Ind. Cas. 427 ; 39 C. 704 ; 16 C. W. N. 838.

400 tons of white Java of November December shipments and that he was informed that plaintiff was inclined also to offer for brown Java and the broker was instructed to get both the offers in writing. If the evidence of the defendants is to be accepted it appears clear that the offer for the white Java was distinct from that for the brown Java. Does then the circumstance of both the offers appearing in one memo addressed to Finlay negative the conclusion which prima facie this evidence suggests. According to Mr. Brachi, Ex. 6, which contains both the offers, is a printed form of a memo used for sundries and the office has no forms for sugar. When the broker went to the plaintiff to take his signature on the offer for the white Java he was also told to bring an offer for the brown Java in writing and there does not seem any apparent necessity for the two offers to be written on separate memos considering that they were by the same dealer. Mr. Brachi has stated in his evidence. " We have had oral offers made to us for two commodities at the same time by the same dealer. I have had offers for white and brown Java sugar from the same dealer at the same time. I would treat an offer of this description (by which he referred to the offer in suit) as two distinct offers unless the dealer asks that they should be treated jointly". There can be no doubt that defendants treated the two offers as separate. Ex. 48 is a telegram that they received from Java offering 200 tons of the white sugar alone at a particular rate and it was in pursuance of this telegram that Hassanand had been sent to the market to produce offers for the white sugar alone ; but when the broker returned and informed the defendants that the plaintiff had expressed his willingness also to purchase 100 tons of brown sugar, defendants despatched a wire, Ex. 49, to Batavia in reply to the wire received that they could not accept the offer for the white sugar at the rate mentioned, but counter-offered for 400 tons white Java at Rs. 23-12-0 per cwt. November-December shipment and in the same telegram but as distinct from the previous offer for the White made a firm offer for 100 tons Brown Java at Rs. 20-8-0 per cwt. of the same shipment. It could be scarcely arguable that the Java dealers could interpret this telegram, Ex. 49, as implying that they should either accept or reject both and defendants themselves disown any such intention. Ex. 50 the reply to Ex. 49 accepted the offer for the 400 tons white Java and followed it up with a letter Ex. 51 confirming the acceptance. Defendants could not for a moment contend that the acceptance was invalid and not binding on them as it did not relate to the white and the brown sugar. Now the whole of the plaintiff's case as to his offer for the white and brown sugar being interconnected is based entirely on his uncorroborated allegation that he bought the white at a higher rate as the broker offered him the inducement to let him have the brown at a lower rate than the market rate. Apart from the isolated character of plaintiff's statement it appears to me not to accord with the facts of the case as disclosed by the evidence. Plaintiff's trump-card is that the very day that he made an offer for the white Java he purchased that morning similar sugar at Rs. 23-8-0. It is common ground that the price of sugar fluctuates rapidly sometimes even on the same day. Let me for a moment touch on the evidence as to the rates and in doing so it is necessary to observe that only those rates should be primarily considered that refer to transactions of November-December shipment. Lauper, the Assistant Manager of Volkart Bros., states in his evidence on reference to what he describes as his quotation book, that the market rate of sugar on the 10th August, i. e., the same day plaintiff made his offer to defendants, for November-December shipment was Rs. 24-3-0 per cwt. on the 9th August that is the day previous he states that the rate was Rs. 24-8-0 for white Java and on the 12th August Rs. 23-8-0 for the same sugar, both being for November-December shipment. Ex. 81 shows that the plaintiff himself had purchased on the 10th August 1921, 50 tons of white Java of November-December shipment from Volkart Brothers at Rs. 23-12-0 per cwt. The witness further states that on the 10th, Volkart Brothers sold 250 tons at Rs. 23-12-0 and on the same day 150 tons at Rs. 23-12-0 of November-December shipment The evidence of this witness has not been impugned and I believe him implicitly. Tikamdas, Ex. 49, a salesman in Louis Dreyfus & Co. who was examined as a witness by the plaintiff deposes to the sale of 25 tons of white Java on the 10th August of November-December shipment at Rs. 24-0-0 per cwt., also on the same date 100 tons of white Java and 50 of the same at Rs. 24-0-0 per cwt. but of December shipment alone. On the 9th August they sold 200 tons of White Java at Rs. 24-0-0 per cwt. but of December shipment alone and on the 11th August sold 100 tons of White Java at Rs. 23-6-0 and purchased an equal quality of the same sugar at Rs. 23-4-0 both of November shipment alone. I have no doubt that plaintiff did purchase on the 10th August, 90 tons of White Java from Meherbux Alibux at Rs. 23-8-0 per cwt. however of October-November-December shipment, but as I have remarked the market rate varied even on the same day, and the same vendor sold on the 10th August, 12 tons of September shipment at Rs. 23-14-0. I am not at all convinced on the evidence that the rate of Rs. 23-12-0 per cwt. for the 400 tons in suit was a rate higher than the market rate prevailing on the 10th August, and I am equally unconvinced that the rate of Rs. 20-8-0 for the brown Java was lower than the market rate. The salesmen of E. D. Sassoon, Ex. 34, states that on the 8th August his firm sold brown Java of October-November shipment at Rs. 20-12-0 and on the 10th August they sold the same quality at Rs. 20-14-0 for September-October-November-December shipment, it must be remembered that the earlier the shipment the higher the rate. Louis Dreyfus have effected no transactions on the 10th August but on the 11th they purchased 300 tons of Brown Java at Rs. 20-4-0 September to December shipment and on the 12th August sold 100 tons of Brown Java of December shipment at Rs. 20-8-0. Admittedly it is the White Java that is bought and sold in far greater quantities than the Brown and the transactions in the latter commodity are limited. As therefore, I am not prepared on the evidence to accept the plaintiff's assertion that the broker induced him to pay a higher rate for the White and that he would allow him a concession on the Brown, the foundation for the contention that the two offers were inseparable, fails. Further, it seems idle to argue that the plaintiff could have relied on any assurance that the broker may choose to give him, even though he be a broker of the defendants. The vendors were the defendants and it is hardly to be expected that they would sell at a loss or forego their profit merely to please their broker. It was strenuously contended that I should accept the version of the plaintiff as to the circumstances under which the contract was brought about in preference to that of the broker whose moral integrity is sought to be impeached by the following incident: Plaintiff states that this broker Hassanand had unauthorisedly entered into a contract on his behalf in respect of 30 tons of sugar. On the detection of the fraud he tendered an apology, Ex. 32. This apology does contain an admission that on the 17th May 1920 the broker had as he describes himself "through his carelessness" entered into a contract with Topandas on behalf of the plaintiff which the latter had not authorised, and which was therefore cancelled, and in lieu of it a new contract was entered into for 22½ tons with the same Topandas. The broker's explanation in respect of this charge against him is certainly unsatisfactory and his assertion that the plaintiff backed out of the bargain with Topondas and that he was made to append his signature on a piece of paper on which there was something written but which was not read out to him is difficult to accept. But the important fact remains that even after this piece of shady transaction on the part of the broker the plaintiff did not cease to enter into contracts through his agency. It is a matter of common knowledge that brokers sometimes for the purposes of gain do resort to the nefarious system of entering into a transaction unauthorisedly in the expectation of its subsequent ratification, but it is a far cry that because Hassanand has been shown to be guilty of shady practice his evidence as to the circumstances under which the contract in suit was entered into should be entirely discarded. His evidence, as I have remarked, is corroborated, no doubt, by witnesses in defendants' service but which I see no reason to treat as unworthy of credence. Besides the burden of proof undoubtedly lay on the plaintiff to show that he entered into the contract in consequence of the mis-representation of Hassanand and that the offer made by him was one and inseparable. Plaintiff is not a novice in his business, on his own admission, he deals very largely in sugar, and if by reason of his experience in his dealings with Hassan and he felt that the latter was a man of doubtful virtue he should have stipulated in Ex. 6 that either both offers should be accepted or neither. I am strongly inclined to the view that plaintiff's assertion that it was the inducement held out by the broker that he should offer for the white Java at a slightly higher rate and that the Brown Java would be supplied to him at a rate lower than the market rate and that this understanding led him to make one offer for both is a fiction of his imagination. When the acceptance notice, Ex 7, was sent to him on the 11th August and he replied to it on the 12th August, Ex. 8, there is no reference in his letter to any inducement held out by the broker, all that was said was "that there was but one offer for both the white and brown Java, and it was not open to you to accept the one without accepting the other." The facts leading to the offer must have been quite fresh in the plaintiff's mind when he gave instructions for Ex. 8 and he must have been aware if it were true, that it was the representation made by the broker that operated on his mind in making an offer for the two qualities of the sugar. It is, therefore, very remarkable that there should be an entire absence of any reference to such an important fact. It is only on the 15th August, by Ex. 10 that plaintiff refers to the inducement held out by the broker after defendants had repudiated their assertion that there had been but one offer for the two commodities.

It was further argued that the acceptance note of the defendants, Ex. 7, was conditional and the plaintiff treated it as a counter offer which he declined. I fail to understand how the defendants could be said to have imposed any fresh condition on the plaintiffs which was not contained in the offer of the latter. The written offer, Ex. 6, required the defendant to intimate his acceptance by 10 P. M. of the morrow and the offer was subject to the conditions of the defendants' Indent forms and the acceptance notice was despatched within the time prescribed and intimated that the offer for the 400 tons white Java was accepted "subject to the confirmation of our telegram and the terms of the Agreement which we shall call upon you to sign in due course as usual." It is true that by Ex. 6 plaintiffs asked the defendants to telegraph to their friends in England to purchase, this appears in the printed part of the form, but as Mr. Brachi explains, the form used is one for sundries and they have no sugar forms and that all their sundries are purchased through their London office whereas the "sugar as a rule is purchased from Java, sometimes from London and sometimes locally." Defendants did wire to Java offering Rs. 23-12-0 per cwt. for the Java, this was accepted Ex. 50, and a confirmation letter was sent Ex. 51. Does then the question that the defendants did not wire to England as required by Ex. 6, but wired to Java affect the validity of the contract? Mr. Brachi states in his evidence "when the dealer places an offer with us we need not necessarily wire. We may wire wherever we like. It is open to us to accept the offer without buying locally or without wiring and subsequently buying and supplying on the due date." Now there can be little doubt that the dealings between the plaintiff and defendants were as principal to principal. The Indent establishes it, vide Lauper's evidence Ex. 80. Paul Beier v. Chotalal Javerdas (9). Para. 13 of the Indent. Ex. 30 subject to which the offer was made is as follows: "James Finlay & Co. reserve to themselves the right to fulfil this contract or any part thereof by either importing the goods out from Europe or elsewhere or by purchase out here." Therefore, defendants were entitled notwithstanding the printed words in Ex. 6 "to wire to England" either to do so, or wire to Java or procure the goods locally. In fact I do not believe for a moment that it was the intention of either party that the sugar the subject-matter of the contract, should be ordered out from England, certainly it was not the intention of the defendants for they invited offers only after they had received a telegram from Java offering white sugar at certain rates and when the dealer made an offer to them they wired to Java in response to the telegram, nor as the relations between defendant and plaintiff were those between vendor and purchaser, could it possibly have been the intention of the plaintiff that the sugar to be supplied to him could be only such as was imported from England, as long as the sugar tendered to him was of the quality required and at the rates and shipments specified in his offer. And further, as he made, an offer subject to the conditions contained in the defendants' Indent forms he is bound by those conditions. No doubt, the general rule of construction of a written contract is that the language of an instrument is to be understood in its ordinary and natural meaning, but at the same time the whole of the contract must be considered in order to ascertain the meaning of any particular part thereof. The offer Ex. 6 is to be interpreted in the light of the conditions contained in the Indent and as that empowers defendants either to import the goods from Europe or elsewhere, plaintiff can have no legitimate ground for complaint. It is true that the Indent in which the submission clause is incorporated is not signed by the plaintiff, but if parties have agreed in writing to submit their differences to arbitration, the submission need not be signed. Utoomal v. Haridas (10), Lyon Lord & Co. v. Chapsi (11).

It is alleged that defendants fraudulently represented to the plaintiffs that their offer had been accepted by their Home friends in England. There is absolutely no ground for this averment. The acceptance Ex. 7 merely states that the offer was accepted "subject to the confirmation of our telegram and to the terms of the agreement." The confirmation of our telegram means according to Mr. Brachi and what it may usually be taken to mean, confirmation by post.

Mr. Rupchand for the plaintiff desired to lead evidence that his client has dealt extensively in sugar and never resiled from his bargains, and Mr. Kimatrai on the other hand was desirous of cross-examining some of the witnesses on the delinquencies of the defendant in the performance of some of his contracts, I disallowed both as in my opinion the conduct of the defendant in other transactions in the sugar market were neither relevant nor material in the present case which I proposed to consider on its own merits ; nor do I feel it necessary to discuss the circumstances under which the offer from the plaintiff was taken in writing.

The evidence clearly establishes that shortly after the 10th August the market was falling. Plaintiff states in his evidence "After the 11th August the sugar market went on declining," and defendants allege that it was due to this decline in the sugar market that the plaintiffs attempted to withdraw from their contract. Mr. Rupchand replies that the market went down not only in respect of white but also brown sugar and the motive urged for the plaintiff by insisting that his contract was also for brown was only adding to his burden, and his second argument was that as the market declined only by about 4 to 6 annas the loss to his client would be somewhere about Rs. 2,000 only which to him was a flea-bite. It appears to me that the plaintiff's contention as to his readiness to accept the contract for the Brown sugar also is thinly veiled attempt to wriggle out of the contract, and his pleader's statement that a loss of Rs. 2,000 only would not be an inducement powerful enough to make him back out of his liability is one that I can view only with considerable suspicion. But above all, one cannot lose sight of the important fact that if plaintiff fulfilled his contract he had in the first instance to pay up a sum of about Rs. 50,000.

My finding, therefore, on the first part of issue 4 is in the negative and on the second part in the affirmative.

I hold on issues 5 and 6 that there was a valid and binding contract between the parties which was not voidable at the instance of the plaintiff.

Issue 7 is a simple issue. The Indent Ex. 30 subject to which the offer Ex. 6 was made contains a submission clause and when the offer was accepted, the terms of the Indent became binding on the parties as those terms are incorporated in the contract and there was nothing as far as I can see to prevent the operation of the arbitration clause. I hold, therefore, on issue 7 that the plaintiff did agree to submit to arbitration the disputes arising between the parties out of the contract and on issue 8 that there was no valid bar to the defendants referring the disputes to arbitration.

Issues 9 and 10.—The latter issue has not been pressed by Mr. Kimatrai and only issue

(10) 7 Ind. Cas. 595 ; 4 S. L. R. 26.
(11) 49 Ind. Cas. 135 ; 12 S. L. R. 55.

9 need be considered. It must be remembered at the very outset that what the defendants sought to and did refer to arbitration was not the factum of the contract but the dispute arising out of it. The fact that plaintiff denied the existence of the contract did not necessarily operate as a bar to defendants proceeding with arbitration proceedings on the failure of the plaintiff to pay the amount due on his purchase. The goods in question were to be shipped in two equal monthly lots ; on the arrival of the first lot of 200 tons, notice of arrival was given to the plaintiff and on his failing to take delivery he was informed that the defendants would re-sell the goods in terms of the Indent. The sugar was resold and a memo. of the loss sustained by the resale was submitted to the plaintiff and as he did not reimburse the defendants the latter referred the disputes to arbitration. The same procedure was followed with regard to the second lot of 200 tons. Clause 14 of the Indent provides for a reference to arbitration of "disputes of whatsoever nature arising out of this contract including the question of the construction of this contract." The two references to arbitration state that disputes have arisen out of the contract and they are referred to the decision of the arbitrators. Both the awards determine the amount that plaintiff should pay the defendants. It is remarkable that plaintiff who has so vigorously contended that there was no contract between the parties and, therefore, demurred to the jurisdiction of the arbitrators neither appeared before the arbitrators nor was represented and allowed the arbitration to proceed ex parte.

It is argued that the points in difference between the parties do not fall within the submission clause even if the submission clause be held binding, and that mere refusal to pay does not justify a reference to arbitration. The contention of the plaintiff that it could not have been within the intention of the parties to refer to arbitration the question as to the refusal to pay would be entirely subversive of the arbitration clause and render it a nullity. In Finlay Co. v. Jashanmal Kirpalani (12) following the judgment in Donald Graham & Co. v. Asumal Khushaldas (13) which was upheld on appeal, it was held that a mere failure to pay a claim constitutes a difference between the parties to a submission I am bound by this ruling and hold that the failure by the plaintiff to pay the amount claimed by the defendants did constitute a matter in difference arising out of the contract justifying a reference to arbitration. It was next argued that the arbitrators were functi officio as soon as suit No. 25 of 1922 was filed, and that the defendants could not after the filing of this suit appoint arbitrators in respect of the second lot of 200 tons of white Java sugar. As I have observed above Suit No. 25 of 1922 was filed on 9th January 1922 and the first award in respect of the 200 tons of the first shipment was made on the 10th January 1922 and the second award was made on the 7th February 1922. As far as the first award was concerned it is not alleged that the filing of the suit was known to the arbitrators nor were the arbitrators restrained from proceeding with the arbitration. The question is, were the arbitrators debarred from proceeding with arbitration with reference to the second lot of 200 tons? I am bound by the Judgment of this Court in Totaram v. Mitsui Bussan, Rev. Appln. No. 48 of 1921, that the filing of a suit does not ipso facto render the arbitrators functi officio and their award void. I must, therefore, hold that this contention cannot prevail.

It was lastly argued that the defendants could not refer the same disputes twice over to the same arbitrators; but the defendants have not done so. The first reference was in respect of the sugar in relation to the first shipment and the second with respect to the December shipment. Clause 11 of the Indent expressly stipulates "that this agreement is to be deemed and construed as a separate contract in respect of each instalment of goods in case the goods are to be shipped and delivered in instalments and the rights and liabilities of James Finlay & Co. and mine respectively shall be the same as if a separate contract had been made out and signed in respect of each instalment." As held in Balmukand Raiz v. Gopiram Bhotica (14), there may be as many awards as there are disputes arising out of the contract. The submission is not exhausted by reason of the mere fact that one award, final and complete in itself, has issued from it.

DEO SARAN BHARTHI v. DEOKI BHARTHI

My finding, therefore, on issue 11 is that the plaintiff is not entitled to any relief and this suit is dismissed with costs on the plaintiff.

Suit No. 25 of 1922 is also dismissed but I make no order as to costs, and in Misc. Nos. 36 and 92 of 1922, I direct the award to stand filed.

Suits dismissed.

PATNA HIGH COURT.

FIRST CIVIL APPEAL NO. 129 OF 1921.

April 24, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Jwala Prasad and Mr. Justice Kalwant Sahai.

DEO SARAN BHARTHI AND ANOTHER—PLAINTIFFS—APPELLANTS

DEOKI BHARTHI AND ANOTHER—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 92, scope of—Trustee setting up adverse title—Suit, maintainability of—Transfer of Property Act (IV of 1882), ss. 122, 123—Hindu Law—Gift, essentials of—Dedication to deity—Acceptance by donee.

To make s. 92 of the Civil Procedure Code applicable it is not necessary that the existence of the trust for public, charitable or religious purposes alleged by the plaintiff should be admitted by the defendant and a suit under that section is maintainable for declaratory relief, where the trustee not only mismanages the trust property but sets up a title adverse to the trust. [p. 982, col. 1.]

Jamal-uddin v. Mujtaba Husain, 25 A. 681; A.W.N. (1903) 120; Budh Singh Dudhuria v. Niradbaran Roy. 2 C. L. J. 431; Jafarkhan Jatbarkhan Pathan v. Daudshah Mohamedshah Fakir, 9 Ind. Cas 358; 13 Bom. L. R. 49, referred to.

Under section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act to constitute a valid gift, there must be a voluntary giving by the donor and an acceptance by the donee. What constitutes acceptance depends upon the circumstances of each case. [p. 982, col. 2.]

In the case of the donee, being incapable of signifying his acceptance by reason of age or of his being an impersonal being recognized by law as capable of being a donee, such as deity, the acceptance required by the section may be done on his behalf by somebody else competent to act as an agent. The acceptance may again be signified by an overt act such as the actual taking possession of the property, or such act by the donee as would in law amount to taking possession of the property where the property is not capable of physical possession. Thus actual delivery of possession is not essential in all cases, for it is only one of the modes of indicating acceptance. [p. 982, col. 2.]

Case-law referred to.

A registered deed of gift cannot take the place of those essentials among which is the complete divesting of the ownership by the donor. Therefore, it must be proved in each case, apart from the registration of the document, that there was a complete divesting of the ownership. A registered deed of gift, as any other such document, may be merely a nominal transaction, without any intention on the part of the executant to give effect to the terms falsely or fictitiously set forth in the document. [p. 983, col. 1.]

The Transfer of Property Act lays down general provisions governing gifts and dedications and there is no distinction in principle between the essential ingredients requisite for a valid gift or dedication in Hindu Law and those laid down by the Act. [p. 983, col. 2.]

The essential ingredient that constitutes gift of moveable or immoveable property in the Hindu Law whether in favour of a deity or a human being is the Sankalp and the Samarpan whereby the property is given completely away and the owner completely divests himself of the ownership in it. [p. 983, col. 2.]

Appeal against the decision of the District Judge, Gaya, dated the 11th March 1921.

Messrs. C. C. Das and Naval Kishore Prasad II, for the Appellants.

Messrs. S. M. Mullick, Siva Nandan Roy and Satyadeva Sahai, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.

Jwala Prasad, J.—This is an appeal by the plaintiffs. The plaintiff No. 1 is the Chela of Mahanth Sheosharan Bharthi. The plaintiff No. 2 alleges himself to be a pujari of the temple of Shiva to whom the properties in suit are said to have been dedicated.

The plaintiffs' case is that Sheosharan Bharthi defendant No. 2 on 31st October, 1912, executed a deed of trust dedicating the properties in suit to the god Shiva and appointing defendant No. 1 as manager and trustee of the endowment and that the defendant No. 1 acted as such for some years. In 1915, he and Musammat Punia acting in collusion got defendant No. 2 to execute two registered sale-deeds, dated the 23rd and 25th

November 1917, selling to defendant No. 1 the properties already dedicated to the god Shiva except one-fourth share in certain jagir lands which was given to Musammat Punia under sale-deed, dated the 25th November 1917. It is said that defendant No. 1 is acting adversely to the trust and is setting up a title of his own and consequently he has committed a breach of the trust and is liable to be removed. The suit was instituted under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code after obtaining sanction of the Legal Remembrancer.

The defendant No. 5 Sheosaran Bharthi did not appear. The suit was resisted by defendant No. 1 Deoki Bharthi alone. He repudiates the allegation that there was any trust or dedication of properties to the god Shiva as alleged by the plaintiffs and he set up his own absolute title to the properties based upon the aforesaid sale-deeds executed by Sheosharan Bharthi in his favour and in that of Musammat Punia. He also took certain pleas in bar. Upon the pleadings a number of issues were raised in the Court below, but for the purposes of this appeal the following only need be mentioned. The finding on the other issues is not challenged.

"1. Can the suit proceed under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code?"

"2. Can the plaintiffs maintain this suit?"

"5. Whether the properties in suit were dedicated to the god Shiva as alleged in the plaint?"

"6. Whether the defendant No. 1 is a trustee in respect of the properties in suit?"

The Court below decided Issue No. 1 in favour of the plaintiffs and Issues Nos. 5 and 6 against them. In the result it dismissed the suit. The plaintiffs have come to us in appeal.

The learned Vakil for the respondents says that the Court below was wrong in deciding the Issue No. 1 in favour of the plaintiffs and that it ought to have held that the suit is not maintainable under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code.

The learned Vakil contends that section 92 has no application to the present suit wherein the plaintiffs want a declaration that the properties in suit were dedicated to the god Shiva. His contention is that the section is confined only to a case where the prayer is merely to remove a trustee and to give necessary direction for the administration and management of the trust property. He relies upon the wordings in section 92, which are as follows: —

"In the case of any alleged breach of any express or constructive trust created for public purposes of a charitable or religious nature, or where the direction of the Court is deemed necessary for the administration of any such trust, the Advocate General, or two or more persons having an interest in the trust and having obtained the sanction in writing of the Advocate-General, may institute a suit, whether contentious or not, in the principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction or in any other Court empowered in that behalf by the Local Government within the local limits of whose jurisdiction the whole or any part of the subject-matter of the trust is situate, to obtain a decree.

(a) removing any trustee;
(b) appointing a new trustee;
(c) vesting any property in a trustee;
(d) directing accounts and inquiries etc.
(h) granting such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require."

This section, according to Mr. Mullick, assumes that there is no dispute as to there being a trust express or constructive, and that the only question involved is as to the conduct of the trustee in the administration of the trust property. In support of his contention he relies upon the case of Jamaluddin v. Mujtaba Husain (1). There the suit was brought as an ordinary suit cognizable by a Subordinate Judge for the purpose of a declaration that the property was endowed property and for removal of the Mutawalli on account of mismanagement of the trust. Upon the plea taken by the defendants, the Subordinate Judge dismissed the plaintiff's case upon the ground that section 539 of the old Civil Procedure Code, which corresponds to section 92 of the present Code, was a bar to the suit, no consent of the proper officer to institution of the suit having been obtained. On appeal the High Court of Allahabad held that the Court could only return the plaint to the plaintiff to be presented to a Court having jurisdiction to try the suit and ought not to have dismissed the suit. The decision virtually supports the view opposite to that contended for by Mr. Mullick. The case was considered and explained in Budh Singh Dudhuria v. Niradharan Roy (2), in that case upon facts similar to the present case it was held that in order to make section 539 applicable it is not necessary that the existence of the trust for public, charitable or religious purposes alleged by the plaintiff should be admitted by the defendant. If the trust is disputed, the question is decided by the Court upon evidence. To the same effect is the decision in the case of Jafarkhan Jatbarkhan Pathan v. Daudsha Mahomedshah Fakir (3).

It appears that where a trustee not only mismanages the trust property but sets up a title adverse to the trust, there is no reason why section 92 cannot be invoked. That section is wide enough, and in clause (h), which I have quoted above, power is given to the court to grant any relief as the nature of the case may require. The primary object of the provision is the administation of trust property by removing the trustee, appointing a new trustee or making such directions as may be necessary for the protection and management of the trust property. In order to secure that object it may be necessary for the plaintiff as a member of the public interested in the preservation and management of the trust property to seek for reliefs, such as a relief of a declaratory nature like the one in the present case. We, therefore, overrule this contention of Mr. Mullick.

The case really depends upon the decision of issues No. 5 and 6. The Court below has held that there was no real dedication of the properties in suit to the god Shiva, nor was defendant No. 1 a trustee in respect of the properties in suit. The plaintiffs-appellants impugn the finding of the Court below and on their behalf it has been urged by Mr. Das, that the trust-deed dated the 31st October 1922, is conclusive as regards the creation of the trust and dedication of properties to the god Shiva. The learned Counsel goes so far as to contend that the deed being a registered document purporting to effect complete dedication of the properties to Shiva, no subsequent act or conduct of the dedicator, Mahanth Sheosaran Bharthi, defendant No. 2, is admissible to show that there was no real dedication. No authority has been cited in support of this proposition. A faint reliance has, however, been placed upon section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act under which a gift of immoveable property must be effected by a registered instrument and a gift of moveable property may be effected either by registered instrument or by delivery. The provision in this section does not purport to legislate that the registration of a deed of gift in respect of an immoveable property is sufficient transfer of the property. It follows section 122 of the Act, which lays down the requisite essentials of a complete gift, namely (1) the transfer of property, (2) made voluntarily without consideration by one person called the donor to another called the donee, and accepted by or on behalf of the donee. There must be, therefore, a voluntary giving by the donor and an acceptance by the donee. In the case of the donee, being incapable of signifying his acceptance by reason of age or of his being an impersonal being, recognized by law as incapable of being a donee-such as deity, the acceptance required by the section may be done on his behalf by somebody else competent to act as an agent. The acceptance may again be signified by an overt act such as the actual taking possession of the property, or such act by the donee as would in law amount to taking possession of the property where the property is not capable of physical possession. Thus actual delivery of possession is not essential in all cases, for it is only one of the modes of indicating acceptance. This will explain, the seeming contradiction in some of the authorities cited before us. These authorities are as follows: Kishto Soondery Debea v. Ranee Kishtomati (4) Dagai Dabee v. Mothura Nath Chattopadhya (5), Kalidas Mullick v. Kanhaya Lal Pundit (6), Watson and Company v. Ramchand Dutt (7), Lakshimoni Dasi

In some cases actual delivery of the properties gifted was insisted upon and in others it was condoned. But there has been no real difference as regards the principle that there must be something shown to indicate an acceptance on the part of the donee, and as to whether there has been an acceptance and what constitutes acceptance depends upon the circumstances of each case. In this light I have read the authorities cited before me and I do not want to refer to them in detail. This disposes of the part the donee is required to play in a completed gift On behalf of the donor the essential ingredient as adverted to above is, that he should voluntarily and without consideration transfer the property to the donee. The giving away of the property as the essential ingredient for a valid gift implies a complete divesting of the ownership in the property by the donor. Section 122 only provides a further safeguard by requiring a gift of immoveable properties to be effected by a registered instrument. It cannot in any way affect the essential ingredients of a completed gift set forth in section 122 and referred to above. A registered deed of gift cannot take the place of those essentials among which is the complete divesting of the ownership by the donor. Therefore it must be proved in each case, apart from the registration of the document, that there was a complete divesting of the ownership. A registered deed of gift, as any other such document, may be merely a nominal transaction, without any intention on the part of the executant to give effect to the terms falsely or fictitiously set forth in the document. In the cases referred to above in spite of the documents in question being registered ones, the question as to whether there was a complete gift was determined upon the proof or otherwise of there being a complete divesting of the ownership by the donor, Reference has been made in some of those cases to the Hindu gifts and more particularly to the dedication of a property to a deity by a Hindu. The Transfer of Property Act lays down general provisions governing gifts and dedications, and I have in vain ransacked the provision in the texts to find out any real distinction in principle between the essential ingredients requisite for a valid gift or dedication in Hindu Law and those laid down in the Transfer of Property Act. The dedication to a deity and the creation of a trust for religious purposes no doubt finds favour in the Hindu Law just in the same way as it does in other communities, and the essential ingredient that constitutes gift whether of moveable or immoveable property in the Hindu Law is the Sankalp and the Samarpan whereby the property is completely given away and the owner completely divests himself of the ownership in the property. In the Hindu Law as elsewhere there must be a real and true Sankalp and Samarpan. This view seems to have been entertained by the parties themselves in this case who are Hindus. The plaintiffs and their witnesses, apart from proving the registered deed, try to prove that there was a general meeting where the dedication of the property was effected by Sheosaran Bharthi in favour of the God Shiva. The plaintiffs being Hindus could not rest their case, as the learned Counsel on their behalf tried to do in this Court, simply upon the execution of a registered deed of gift as if it was an ordinary transfer of property by way of mortgage or sale. I could understand the contention of Mr. Das based upon the registration of the document if he had urged that the registration thereof shifted the onus upon the opposite party to prove that there was no gift or that it lightened the burden of proof that rested upon the plaintiffs to show that there was a true and real dedication. For my own part I would say that a registration of the document will only affect the onus so far as the execution thereof is concerned but will in itself be no proof of the real dedication of the property or the divesting of the ownership therein by the donor. The onus, therefore, according to my view, of proving real dedication, namely, the Sankalp and the Samarpan of the properties in favour of the donee, the God Shiva, rests upon the plaintiffs. The question of onus, however, does not arise in this particular case inasmuch as the evidence as summarised by the Court below has been one-sided, viz., that produced on behalf of the defendants. They have proved by overwhelming documentary and oral evidence that ever since the execution of the deed of trust, Sheosaran Bharthi the dedicator has been exercising acts of possession and, in fact, has been in actual possession up to the present moment just as he was before the deed in question was executed. The exhibits in the case consist of leases, mortgages and sales executed by Sheosaran Bharthi from 1912 when the deed was executed up to 1918 : (Exts. A, B, D, E, F, F1, H, H1, and H2). No such document on behalf of the plaintiffs has been produced showing the dealings of the property by the donee on the footing that the properties were the dedicated properties of the God Shiva ; not even the account of the income and expenditure has been produced showing that the donee received any income of the property or spent anything towards the purposes for which the dedication of the trust was created. The actual possession of the properties has been similarly proved to have been continued in Sheosaran Bharthi unaffected in any way by the trust deed of the year 1912 in question. The rent receipts Exts. C to C 24 prove that the rents were paid by Sheosaran Bharthi and his name stood recorded in the landlord's Sarishta ; there is nothing to show that any rent was paid by the donee to the landlord.

Now, is there anything to show that an attempt even was made by the donee to have his name mutated in the landlord's Sarishta? Soon after the alleged deed of dedication of 1912 came the preparation of the Survey Record-of-Rights and the dispute lists (Exts. K and K1 of April 1914, and the finally published Record-of-Rights of January, 1916, (Ext. L) conclusively establishes the actual possession of Sheosaran Bharthi even after the execution of the deed of trust. As against the aforesaid unimpeachable evidence of actual and continuous possession of Sheosaran Bharthi from before and after the execution of the deed of gift, the plaintiffs have only two documents Exhibits 1 and 3, the first being a report of the Sub-Inspector of Police dated the 5th November 1915, and the second an extract from the register of criminal records sent to the Record-Room in the aforesaid case in 1917.

The Court below has commented adversely upon these documents and has held them to be spurious. It has also shown that the identity of the parties mentioned in those documents has not been satisfactorily established. Their relevancy and admissibility are also questionable. In no case the report can be accepted as evidence of the statement of the complainant and we cannot agree with Mr. Das that the statement relied upon by him can in law be used as evidence. The Sub-Inspector who recorded it is dead and no evidence is given that that was the statement actually made by the complainant. Again the aforesaid two documents which constitute simply one transaction, assuming them to be relevant and true, only show an attempt on the part of Deoki Bharthi to take possession of the property and to assert his right under the deed of dedication. But the actual divesting of ownership by Sheo Saran Bharthi cannot be established by these documents which relate to an event in 1915 as against the evidence of the defendants that between 1912 after the execution of the deed, and 1915, the date of the aforesaid event, Sheosaran Bharthi not only asserted his possession but has been in continuous actual possession of the property.

The oral evidence merits the same remark, namely, that the evidence on behalf of the defendants consists of competent witnesses such as the lessees, mortgagees and others having dealings with the property. These witnesses prove the possession of Sheosaran Bharthi uninterrupted in any way by the deed of trust ; they prove that the deed was never given effect to and was merely a nominal and sham transaction. The plaintiff's witnesses cannot claim disinterestedness and independence which would merit any consideration of their evidence by the Court. Their evidence has been shown by the Court below to be discrepant and inconsistent with the case of the plaintiffs as laid in the plaint which they want to improve by setting up two events: (1) the previous dedication of the property, Sankalp and Simarpan in the presence of the people and (2) the subsequent execution of the deed of trust.

We have carefully gone through the oral evidence and considered the comments made on behalf of the parties. In fact, Mr. Das did not feel confident of the oral evidence tendered on behalf of the plaintiffs and consequently did not seem to rely upon it. We need not repeat the reasons given in detail by the learned District Judge who appears to us to have carefully and exhaustively gone into the evidence. Suffice it to say that we entirely concur with his estimate of the evidence. We prefer the evidence given on behalf of the defendants to that adduced on behalf of the plaintiffs. Upon the evidence, oral and documentary, therefore, no real dedication of the property has been proved, nor has it been proved that defendant No. 1 was a trustee of the properties in question.

Agreeing, therefore, with the view of the Court below, we dismiss the appeal with costs.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908) O. IX, rr. 8, 9—Dismissal of suit for default—Fresh suit, whether barred—'Cause of action' meaning of—Minor plaintiff—Guardian ad litem, change of, effect of.

I C—124

The term 'cause of action' means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved. It has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour. [p. 986, col. 1.]

Read v. Brown, (1888) 22 Q. B. D. 128 at p. 131; 58 L. J. Q. B. 120; 60 L. T. 250; 37 W. R. 131; Chand Kour v. Partab Singh, 16 C. 98 at p. 102; 15 I. A. 156; 5 Sar. P. C. J. 243; 12 Ind. Jur. 331; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 65 (P. C.), relied on.

Defendant obtained a decree on a mortgage executed by a Hindu. The minor sons of the latter brought a suit for partition of the family properties free from the mortgage on the ground that the mortgage was not for necessity, but was executed for immoral purposes personal to the mortgagor. The suit was dismissed under O. IX r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. Defendant then applied for sale of the mortgaged property in execution of his decree. The sons of the mortgagor then brought the present suit for an injunction restraining the defendant from selling the property in execution of his decree. The suit was based on the same allegations on which the previous suit was based.

Held, that the second suit was barred under O. IX r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, as the cause of action in both suits was the same. [p. 987, col. 1.]

The provisions of O. IX, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code cannot be nullified in the case of minor plaintiffs by the simple process of changing guardians-ad-litem from time to time, and alleging their knowledge at various times. [p. 987, col. 1.]

Appeal from the decree of the Assistant Judge, Hyderabad.

Mr. Harchandrai Vishindas, for the Appellant.

Mr. Gopaldas Samtari, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—In 1911, Dharamdas mortgaged certain property to Vishindas. On the 26th of August 1914, in suit No. 32 of 1914 Vishindas obtained a mortgage-decree for Rs. 15,000 on this deed of mortgage. In suit No. 29 of 1916 the three minor sons of Dharamdas by their guardian and mother Jamnabai brought a suit against Dharamdas and various alienees of his property including Vishindas, for partition free from mortgages and other encumbrances on the ground that the alienations were not for the purposes of the joint family, but for immoral purposes personal to Dharamdas. That suit was dismissed under O. IX, r. 8. The minor sons by another guardian now sue Vishindas, Dharamdas andothers for an injunction restraining Vishindas from selling this property in execution, as he had applied to do. Vishindas inter alia resisted the suit on the ground that it was barred under O. IX, r. 9 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The Court of First instance, upheld the plea on the ground that the causes of action in the two suits were the same. But the Court of First Appeal held that they were not proved to be the same; and this is a second appeal by Vishindas on the same plea. The question is, therefore, whether the cause of action of the present suit is or is not the same as the cause of action in the former suit. The term 'cause of action has long been judicially defined as being "every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the Judgment of the Court. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved," per Read v. Brown (1). And as was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Chand Kour v. Purtab Singh (2). "The cause of action has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or in other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour."

An initial difficulty in the decision of the appeal was the absence of the pleadings in the former suit, which caused the Court of first appeal to hold that apart from the former suit being a suit for partition, the appellant had not proved the cause of action therein to be the same. It appears, however, from the Judgment of the trying Court that the record of the former suit which had also been tried by it, was referred to by the parties and by that Court for the decision of the present question. In the absence of the pleadings, it would obviously be impossible to decide the point at issue. The proper course for defendant No. 2, appellant, who had set up the bar, would have been to put in copies of the pleadings or other necessary record in support of his plea. Since the case has, however, taken the course it actually did, we are constrained to allow the pleadings in the former suit to be brought in evidence here under O. XLI, r. (27) (b) of the Code of Civil Procedure.

It is argued for the respondents that the application for execution by the appellant is an extraneous act which furnishes them with a fresh cause of action. This plea, we think, is not sustainable. In the first place, there is no evidence as to when the appellant first applied in execution. But that apart, the cause of action in both the suits may be divided into two parts. Firstly the respondent's title which is admittedly identical and secondly the mortgage and its validity, which is impugned in both the suits on the same ground of immorality on the part of the mortgagor's father. This cause of action accrued to the respondent's sons of the mortgagor from the moment of the mortgage; and it remains unaltered whether they chose to sue for its invalidity before the mortgagee sued on it, or for a partition after the mortgage-decree or for an injunction after attachment in execution. The time of suing might alter the form of the reliefs but not the cause of action. The Court of first instance was, therefore, correct in holding that the cause of action comprising both the titles of the minor sons and coparceners in the joint Hindu family as well as the alleged immorality of the father invalidating his mortgage are one and the same in both the suits.

The second ground for the respondents argued before us is that partition is a recurring right, that the former suit failed on account of the negligence of the then guardian the mother, that the present guardians are different and that the knowledge of the latter of this application for execution by the decree-holder, all these circumstances furnish a fresh cause of action. The case cited in support, Lalla Sheo Churan Lal v. Ramnandan Dobey (3), however, hardly goes to this extent.

(1) (1888) 22 Q. B. D. 128 at p. 131; 58 L. J. Q. B. 120; 60 L. T. 250; 37 W. R. 131.

(2) 16 C. 98 at p. 102; 15 I. A. 156; 5 Sar. P.C. J. 248; 12 Ind. Jur. 331; 8 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 65 (P. C).

(3) 22 C. 8; 11 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 7.

We express no opinion on the point as to the legal rights of the minors on attaining majority if they desire to prove negligence on the part of the guardians. The provisions of O. IX, r. 9, cannot, however, be nullified in the case of minor plaintiffs by the simple process of changing guardians-ad-litem from time to time and alleging their knowledge at various times. In the present instance, we may observe that the minors have raised no pleading or issue as to the negligence of the mother in the former suit. The negligence was merely an argument in the trying Court. On the materials before us, it is not necessary, nor are we in a position to find whether the former suit was in the first instance collusive with the father or whether he failed to prosecute it, or whether it failed because of the negligence of the mother. It does not appear, however, that before the filing of the present suit, any steps were taken by or on behalf of the minors to set aside under the latter part of r. 9, the dismissal under O. IX, r. 8.

We agree, therefore, with the Court of the first instance that the present suit is in respect of the same cause of action as the former suit. There is no evidence before us to show whether there was or was not any application for execution prior to the former suit. But, however that may be, we are clearly of opinion that in the present plaint the cause of action is not varied on account of the application for execution; and on this ground alone, this case must be distinguished from the case cited above. Chand Kour v. Partabsing (2).

The appeal, must, therefore, be allowed and the decree of the lower Appellate Court set aside. We confirm the decree of the trying Court and dismiss the plaintiff's suit with costs throughout against the plaintiffs.

Appeal allowed.

Regulation VII of 1822, s. 10 (8)—Malguzar, appointment and status of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885) ss. 3 (4), 105, 188—Malguzars—Proprietary body—"Agent" in s. 188, whether means only one person—Malguzars, whether can start proceedings under s 105—Rate of rent mentioned about excess land—Mukarrari holding—Presumption.

The effect of the appointment of Sadar Malguzar is to suspend or take away for the time being the proprietary rights of the proprietors of the estate. [p. 988, col. 1.]

The Sadar Malguzars constitute the entire body of landlords within the meaning of section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act For the time being the tenants must be held to be holding under the Sadar Malguzars. The right of the other proprietors under the law remains in abeyance so long as the property is managed by the Malguzars under the Regulation. [p. 988, col. 2.]

Malguzars may be considered as agents of the proprietors and as such they are entitled to maintain suits under section 105 Bengal Tenancy Act. The word "Agent" in section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act includes "Agents" There is no special provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act or any other law which would restrict the meaning of words 'agent' to a single individual. [p. 988, col. 2.]

The mere fact that a certain rate is mentioned in respect of excess land to be found in possession of the tenants does not raise the presumption as to the Mukarrari nature of the holdings. [p. 988, col. 2.]

Babu Brojolal Chakravarty (with him Babu Santosh Kumar Bose), for the Appellants.

Babu D. L. Kastgir (with him Babu Nagendranath Bose), for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These consolidated appeals raise two points which are common to all of them. The first is that the respondents are only some of the co-sharer landlords and are, therefore, not competent to maintain suits under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act; and the second point urged is that it should have been held that the rents of the appellants are fixed. The first question is of some importance and is one of first impression.

The facts are that the appellants are tenants of chars Kakra an Hazari. For the purpose of determination of the first question it is not necessary to go to the early history of the estate. Suffice it to say that it was taken possession of by the Collector under Regulation 5 of 1812 under the order of the District Judge. It was released in 1858 on condition that the proprietors of the estate, who had quarrelled amongst themselves, should enter into an agreement, that the management of the estate should be carried on through Malguzars under Regulation 7 of 1822. On the estate being released the Collector resumed possession under arrangement with the whole body of proprietors and let out the estate from time to time to Sadar Malguzars under Regulation 7 of 1822, as extended by Regulation 9 of 1828. The present proceeding was started by the present Sadar Malguzars appointed by the Collector under the Regulation. The question, therefore, is whether these Sadar Malguzars are persons who may be called the entire body of the appellants. The position of the Sadar landlords or who represent the landlords of Malguzar is to be found in section 10 (8) of Regulation VII of 1822. That section empowers the Sadar Malguzar to manage the property, collect rents and pay the Government Revenue. It further lays down that if any of the co-proprietors is in possession of any land within the estate he will hold it as a subordinate proprietor subject to the payment of rent to the Sadar Malguzar, who is vested with exclusive powers over the tenants in the matter of collection of rents &c. &c. The effect of the appointment of Sadar Malguzar is, therefore, to suspend or take away for the time being the proprietary right of the proprietors of the estate. Whether a Sadar Malguzar is a person who may be called "landlord" within the meaning of section 3 (4), Bengal Tenancy Act is to be determined with reference to the definition of the word "landlord" in that section. 'Landlord' is defined as "a person immediately under whom a tenant holds and includes the Government". 'Proprietor' has also been defined in that section as "a person owning an estate or part of an estate." Reading the two definitions together, it would appear that a distinction was attempted to be made between a 'proprietor' having higher proprietary interest and a 'landlord' under whom the tenant holds, who may have an intermediate interest between the proprietor and the tenant. But a proprietor may be a landlord if he has direct relations with the tenants. In the present case it is argued that the tenants must be taken to be holding under the entire body of proprietors, though rent is to be realised only by the Sadar Malguzars. On a reference to the Regulations and the general scheme of the law on this point, it would appear that a Malguzar is more than a mere Collector of rent. In him is vested the management of the estate. Any co-parcener who is in possession of the land is to be considered subordinate to the Malguzar. He is entrusted with powers over the tenants in respect of the collection of rent. The powers apparently include entering into settlements and all acts necessary for the management of the property. We have given our best consideration to this point and the conclusion which we have come to is that the Sadar Malguzars constitute the entire body of landlords within the meaning of section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act For the time being the tenants must be held to be holding under the Sadar Malguzars. The right of the other proprietors under the law remains in abeyance so long as the property is managed by the Malguzars under the Regulation.

There is another point of view from which this question can be looked at. As we have observed the Collector took over charge of this estate on the proprietor's agreeing that the management should be carried on through the Malguzars under Regulation VII of 1822. In pursuance of that agreement Malguzars have been appointed from time to time. They may, therefore, be considered as agents of the proprietors and as such they are entitled to maintain the present suits under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act. Section 188 requires that the entire body of landlords should join in the proceeding or that they should act through an agent. In this connection reference was made to the case of Sati Prosad Gurga v. Radha Nath Maity (1), in which there is some expression of opinion that the word 'agent' as used in section 188 means one person and not more than one person. That was a case in which two brothers of a joint Mitakshara family had brought a suit for assessment of rent under section 52 B. T. A. Their Lordships held that all the members of the joint family must join under section 188 B. T. A. and that two of them could not be considered to be agents of the entire body of landlords. Probably it was enough for the decision of that case to hold that the plaintiffs were not the entire body of landlords nor were they the agents of their co-parceners. The learned Judge, proceeded further to observe as follows. "It is clear, therefore, that the legislature has expressly provided for the performance of an act, not only by the entire body of the joint landlords but also by their representatives. But the legislature contemplated that where such representative is allowed to act, he must be a single individual; in other words, the act, must be done by a single agent authorised to act on behalf of the entire body of landlords." We must respectfully dissent from the view above expressed. Under section 13 Clause (2) of the General Clauses Act 1897 there is no reason why the word 'agent' should not include agents. We have been unable to discover any special provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act or any other law which would restrict the meaning of the words 'agent' to a single individual. I am, therefore, of opinion that the requirements of section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act, have been satisfied in this case, the plaintiffs being regarded as the entire body of landlords or as agents of the entire body of landlords.

The next point is set at rest by the findings of fact arrived at by the learned Judge. It is argued that the tenants are in occupation of this land at any rate from 1808. The lands had diluviated before the Permanent Settlement and had reappeared sometime about 1808 when they were settled with tenants. It is contended that since it has been found that tenants are in possession since 1808 it ought to be presumed that they were in possession from before the Permanent Settlement when the lands were under water. We do not think that we are entitled to make any such presumption. Further the lower Appellate Court has found as a fact that the entire char was unoccupied in 1808. Evidently the tenants did not come into possession of any portion of this char until sometime afterwards and, therefore, no tenancy could have been in existence until then. The presumption that the tenancies had been in existence from the time of the Permanent Settlement in 1793 is thus clearly rebutted. The finding comes to this that the tenants come into occupation of the land sometime after 1808 which negatives the supposition that they were in possession from before the Permanent Settlement. The argument that is based upon it that the tenants having proved uniform payment of rent, for more than 20 years shall be presumed to have permanent Mukarari interest from the time of the Permanent Settlement consequently fails.

A further question is raised in S. A. Nos. 191 to 195 that the fact that there was a stipulation in the Kabuliyat that rent for any additional area to be found in future in possession of the tenants should be paid at a certain rate would make the rate permanent; and in suport of this reliance has been placed on the case of Ram Dayal Giri v. Midnapore Zemindary Coy. (2). The learned Judge has considered this matter and we think that he has come to a correct conclusion. These have been found to be Raiyati holdings and the Kabuliyats merely mention the fact that if any increased area is found in possession of the tenants rent would be charged at a certain rate per kani. It is not stated for what period the rate should continue. From this fact it cannot be presumed as a matter of law that it is intended to create Mukarari holdings. Surja Prosad Sukul v. Midnapore Zemindary Company Ltd. (3), Loges Chandra Ray v. Makbul Ali (4) and Upendralal Gutpa v. Joges Chandra Ray (5). that the mere fact that a certain rate is mentioned in respect of excess land to be found in possession of the tenants does not raise the presumption as to the Mukarari nature of the holdings. In the case of Ramdayal Giri v. Midnapore Zemindary Coy. (2), which was decided by one of the learned Judges who was a party to the decision in the case of Makbul Ali v. Jogesh Chandra Ray (4), there were several factors which led the learned Judges to draw the inference of permanency as to the rate of rent. They observe "it is true there are in the leases no words which by themselves would bar an enhancement such as are used in formal leases in other parts of the country. But there is "the conduct of the parties for more than 60 years showing that notwithstanding one transfer and several successions the same rate of 5 as 4 pies has been maintained ; there is the admitted object of the lease in respect of a large fraction at least of the lands to extend cultivation over jungle lands: there is the progressive nature of the rental in respect of the excess lands." In these circumstances the learned Judges held that the presumption of permanancy of rent may be deduced. These circumstances do not exist in the present cases.

The result is that all these appeals are dismissed with costs. We assess the hearing fee at seven gold mohurs for all these appeals.

Rules and Bye-Laws of Karachi Municipality, Appendix D, r. 6 (e), whether ultra vires—Terminal tax, refund of—Procedure of Municipality, power of, to prescribe rules.

Clause C of rule 6 of Appendix D. of the rules and bye-laws of the Karachi Municipality, which lays down the procedure for the refund of terminal tax in respect of goods supplied to Government is not ultra vires. [p. 991, col. 2.]

No bye-law of a Municipality can cut down an exemption allowed by the Legislature, and any such bye-law is invalid. [p. 991, col. 2.]

Where, however, an exemption is allowed by the bye-laws themselves, it is competent to the municipality to prescribe and lay down the conditions under which it will grant that exemption. [p. 991, col 2.]

Revision, against the decree of the Small Cause Court Judge, Karachi.

JUDGMENT.

Kennedy, J.C. —The defendants imported some fire-wood into the limits of the Karachi Municipality, the firewood was unloaded on the Railway at Kiamari and paid no terminal tax to which under the rules of the Municipality it is liable. It has been found as a fact that this fire-wood was imported by the defendants for the purposes of fulfilling a contract by which they had agreed to supply fire-wood to the Military Department and that the fire-wood was, as a matter of fact, so delivered to the Supply and Transport in terms of the contract.

The Municipality are now bringing a suit against the defendants in order to recover the amount which should have been paid as terminal tax. They filed that suit in the Court of Small Causes, Karachi. The defence set up was that this fire-wood was imported for the use of Government under a contract and it was, therefore, not liable to terminal tax or rather that the importers were entitled to receive refund of the terminal tax, to which the Municipality replied that before the importer could have the benefit of the bye-law prescribing the refund of terminal tax, it was incumbent on the importer to comply with certain conditions laid down in this bye-law, namely, that the importer should produce a certificate signed by the Military Officer at the time of the import and that within 30 days of such importation, he should produce a subsidiary certificate of the same officer or his successor as to what part of the said goods if any have vested in Government. The Municipality, therefore says, that as the defendants have not performed the duty imposed upon them in this respect, the duty incumbent upon the Municipality under clause (c) namely to remit the terminal tax also does not come into force.

The view which commended itself to the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was that this condition laid down by the Municipality is ultra vire. He found that though the Act gives the Municipality a right to exempt the importer from paying terminal tax, it does not allow the Municipality to go further and to say that the exemption must be accompanied by these certificats and thus prescribe a mode of proof for such exemption. He says that there is no doubt that it is perfectly open to the Municipality to require importers to do certain things and if importers do not comply with such bye-laws they would clearly be liable to prosecution, but that the Municipality by their bye-laws cannot cut down any exemption from terminal tax which has been once granted in general terms.

It is to be assumed for the purposes of the suit, that the Municipality has the right to sue for the recovery of the terminal tax, if it is not paid. And we decide this matter on that basis. This case, we must suppose, is of a very rare occurrence because the rules presuppose payment of the dues in respect of the terminal tax before the goods are removed from the Station, therefore, it would not generally be necessary for the Municipality and importers to resort to Courts about it. The present revision application is filed by the Karachi Municipality on the ground that the learned Judge of the Small Cause Court was in error in finding the bye-law ultra vires.

As regards this question, we think, the learned Judge has failed to distinguish between the case of an Octroi tax and a terminal tax. The authorities quoted in favour of the proposition which commended itself to him refer to the cases of Octroi and as regards Octroi, it is admitted by the Legislature there is a right to obtain a refund unless the goods so imported are consumed within the limits of the Municipality or in certain other cases. It is obvious that no bye-law of the Municipality could cut down an exemption allowed by the Legislature. If the Municipality has its bye-laws framed so as to cut down that exemption, such a bye-law would, I think, be clearly invalid. But this is a case of a terminal tax for which there is no such exemption given by the Statute. It is only under the bye-law that any one is entitled to the refund of the terminal tax at all. I cannot see why it should not be competent for the authorities which out of mere grace allow an exemption to prescribe and lay down under what conditions it will grant that exemption. That seems to me all the Municipality has done in this case. There is nothing unreasonable or harsh in the rule itself. In fact, I think that to say that goods which were imported with the view to the fulfilment of a Government contract should be free of liability to pay terminal tax, without at the same time prescribing what proof the Municipality would regard as proof sufficient of such goods having been so actually imported so as to enable itself to decide whether or no, refund should be granted would be in itself an unreasonable rule tending to cause frauds amongst the agents of the Municipality, hardship to importers who might not be able to satisfy the Municipality, hardship to the rate-payer who might be plunged into continual litigation. I cannot, therefore, think this particular bye-law is ultra vires.

The learned Judge of the Small Cause Court has proceeded on this basis which seems to me erroneous and as it is obvious that if this decision is upheld it might cause serious loss hereafter to the Municipality, it is not possible for me to say that this is not the case in which justice does not require us to interfere even though, it does appear, as a matter of fact, that these goods might have been exempted from the terminal tax, should the defendants have taken the correct procedure. It is moreover, noticeable that the defendants appear to be in error throughout as they failed to deposit the money which they should have deposited under Clause 2 of the Municipal rules in question before removing the goods. Had they done so, probably the necessity of obtaining these documents would have remained present in their minds. The Municipality on its side seems to have done nothing incorrect. I do not think that it would be in accordance with justice to refuse the Municipality permission to recover its just dues.

As it is not clear whether the judgment is conclusive or merely a preliminary judgment, the best thing to do is to set aside the judgment of the Small Cause Court Judge who may dispose of the case according to law subject of course, to the above findings.

Costs to abid the result.

Aston, A. J. C.—I concur in the order of the learned Judicial Commissioner remanding the case to the lower Court. I would like, however, to add a few remarks. The facts in the case cited by Mr. Suganlal, namely, The Poona City Municipality v. Ramji Raghunath (1), seem to me in certain respects very similar to those in the present case. There the original plaintiff contracted to supply corn to Government at Poona, Kirkee and the Camp of Exercise and imported corn into Poona for the purposes of his contract. The case shows that he paid octroi duty upon all the corn under the revised octroi rules under section 59, clause (4) of the Bombay District Municipal Act, the octroi was only payable on goods brought within a certain limit, for consumption or use therein. And the ground on which the Municipality refused the refund was that the goods had not been delivered to Governments within the limits, but at Kirkee and the Camp of Exercise. In both cases, therefore, the payment was made to the Municipality in respect of goods eventually delivered to Government and in both cases if the correct system or the proper conditions had been observed the payment would have been exempted or the money returned. The original plaintiff, however, in Poona City Municipality v. Ramji Raghunath (1), suffered from an additional hardship for the judgment shows that the learned Judges in that case were not of a very decided opinion as to the interpretation of the rules. The rules which had been laid down for his guidance were wanting in charity.

The present circumstances can also be differentiated on the ground that the lower Court has held a great portion of rule 6, clause C, appendix D of the rules and bye-laws of the Karachi Municipality to be ultra vires. The consequences, therefore, in the present case are considerable. I am of opinion that the facts are such as to justify our intervention.

When an order under section 283 Civil Procedure Code (Act XIV of 1882), is made against a minor, a suit in respect of that order ought to be filed within one year of his attaining majority under Art 11 of Sch. I to the Limitation Act. If such a suit is filed within one year from the date of the order by the minor's grand-mother and it is dismissed, this cannot extend the period of limitation. [p. 993, col. 2.]

If the guardian of a minor without taking into consideration the legal aspect of a case, but acting bona fide, institutes a suit on behalf of the minor, he is not guilty of gross negligence even though it would have been to the minor's advantage if he had not instituted the suit [p. 994, col. 1.]

the 1st defendant and various other defendants who are alienees from his father. The property claimed for partition is enumerated in various schedules of the plaints, Schedules A to E, and a certain number of the claims made by the plaintiff have been admitted by the learned Subordinated Judge while others have been disallowed; and apparently, since the appeal was filed there has been some understanding arrived at between the parties, for a large number of the respondents do not now appear to oppose the appeal. Finally when the appeal was argued, it was only argued in respect of the following properties—A Schedule, C schedule, a portion of D Schedule, and Schedules F. 5. and E. 9.

The most important schedule is the A Schedule which comprises properties sold at Court auction. At the same auction, certain other properties were sold which have been held to be trust properties, but we are not now concerned with those. When the A Schedule properties were attached, the plaintiff was a minor, but his grandmother presented a claim petition on the 9th of February 1897 and this petition was dismissed and the properties were sold. Subsequently a suit was filed by the plaintiff's grandmother to set aside the order on the claim petition, O. S. No. 269 of 1899 in the District Munsif's Court of Negapatam. That suit was also dismissed. The plaintiff, who attained majority nearly three years before filing the suit, now comes to Court to recover possession of the properties which were then sold. The Subordinate Judge has found that, as there was an order against the plaintiff under section 283 of the Code of Civil Procedure, 1882, the plaintiff ought to have brought his suit within one year of attaining majority under Article 11 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act. It is now argued for the appellant that the order passed on his claim petition in 1897 was one passed without investigation and is consequently not an order under section 283. The claim petition referred not only to the A Schedule properties but to all the properties which were said to be dedicated to charity. The petition was filed on the 9th of February and returned for correction and various adjournments were granted, one at least, for securing the attendance of the petitioner's witnesses, and final orders were passed on the 3rd of May. It is not disputed that the order with regard to the charity properties was passed after investigation and that seems quite clear from the order itself, but it is said that there was no investigation of the plaintiff's claim in respect of the A Schedule properties. He had claimed that they had been attached in execution of the decree for a debt incurred by his father and that the debt was not true and was fraudulent. He further added an inconsistent statement that it was an immoral and illegal debt. He thus first denied the existence of the debt and then alleged that it was an illegal and immoral one. The Subordinate Judge in dealing with this allegation decided that "as a father has a disposing power of the ancestral property in respect of his debts which are not tainted with immorality, the Court can sell in execution whatever he can lawfully sell;" and he also held that,

> "although the son was not a party to the suit or decree, he ought not to be debarred from trying the fact as to the nature of the debt in a suit of his own."

It is contended that this order amounts to a refusal to adjudicate on the claim and merely refers the petitioner to a suit. So far as it is alleged that there was no debt, it is certainly an adjudication and decides that there was a debt, and that the son is liable unless he can prove the contrary. The Subordinate Judge did not think it necessary to discuss the nature of the debt but said that the claimant should file a suit, if so advised. That is not to say, that he did not investigate the claim put in and we are satisfied that there was an investigation within the meaning of section 278. The order was, therefore, one under section 283 and any suit filed in respect of that order ought to be filed within one year of the plaintiff's attaining majority. It is then contended that as a suit was filed within one year by the plaintiff's grandmother, that would in some way extend the period of limitation, but there is nothing to support this contention. It is difficult to see how the filing of a suit which was decided against the claimant would give a right in the future to extend the period of limitation. A further argunment is put forward that the plaintiff's guardian was negligent in preferring the claim petition which she need not have done. If she had been enabled to establish the claim, the property would have been released from attachment and not passed into the hands of strangers. It is, therefore, difficult to understand how there was any negligence in trying to secure the property from passing into the hands of strangers for the benefit of the minor plaintiff. No doubt it might be now to the plaintiff's advantage if no claim had ever been preferred and possibly his present suit would be in time ; but to hold that the guardian, who did not take all these legal questions into consideration, was guilty of gross negligence although she was doing her best in the interest of the minor, is rather a far-fetched argument and we cannot accept it. In this view, the plaintiff's suit is barred by limitation, and it is unnecessary to consider the further question as to whether the question is also res judicata.

JUDGMENT.

Raymond, A. J. C.—The facts of the case out of which this appeal arises are briefly as follows :— Plaintiffs - appellants Azizullah Khan and Teekchand Sojraj filed a suit in the Court of the Sub-Judge at Shikarpur, alleging that they had jointly purchased the building in suit, and that they were obstructed in the attempt to open a door in the eastern wall of the building which would lead to a court-yard common to them and defendants-respondents. They, therefore, prayed for an injunction restraining the respondents from interfering with their rights. Appellant's case was that the property in suit originally belonged to one Habibullah, who by a registered sale-deed, dated the 5th December 1897, sold it to Faiz Mahomed. The latter had two sons, Sher

AZIZALLAH KHAN v. GHULAM HUSSEIN

Mahomed and Ghulam Hussain and on the death of Faiz Mahomed, Sher Mahomed sold his half share in the property to the appellants, who filed a suit 334 of 1912 on the file of the Sub-Judge for partition against Ghulam Hussain and obtained a decree on the 2nd June 1912 in terms of which the eastern portion of the house was allotted to the appellants. On 17th May 1917 appellant Azizullah purchased from Ghulam Hussain by a registered sale-deed, the remaining half of the property and sold half his interest therein to the appellant Teckchand the day following, that is, 18th May 1917.

Of the two respondents Halim entered no defence to the action, but respondent No. 1 Ghulam Hussain stated that the property in suit belongs to Musammat Dada Nawab who died without issue, and he is entitled to it as her next-of-kin. Dada Nawab was a sister of Habibullah above-mentioned and the contention of respondent No 1 was that the property in suit originally belonged to Mahomed Rahim Khan from whom his daughter Sultan Bibi, the mother of Habibullah and Nawab, inherited it, and on the death of Sultan Bibi and Habibullah Nawabi became the sole owner of it. With regard to the sale-deed admittedly executed by Habibullah in favour of Faiz Mahomed and admittedly also attested by Sultan Bibi and Nawab, the argument is that these two attesting witnesses were unaware of the contents of the document and consequently estoppel cannot operate to prevent the right of Habibullah being challenged in disposing of the property. Respondent No. 1 also contended that the appellants have no right to the relief sought by way of injunction.

An important point I may also mention at this stage before discussing the merits and legal aspect of the case. In suit No. 23 of 1912 to which I have referred above, appellants applied for execution of the decree by possession of Sher Mahomed's share in the house which was then in the occupation of Musammat Nawab. As she obstructed the possession, an enquiry into her claim was made, and she was examined, and the Sub-Judge passed an order directing her to relinquish possession and the appellants notified delivery of possession on the 7th February 1913. It does not, however, appear whether this possession was physical or symbolical, for Musammat Nawab again entered into possession and was in occupation of the property till her death which took place about a year before the present suit was filed. The Sub-Judge, Shikarpur, held that appellants had not proved their ownership of the house in dispute and they had no right to open a door leading to the court-yard and, therefore, dismissed their suit for injunction. On appeal, the District Court of Sukkur remarking that the dispute between the parties really converged on the ownership of the house, framed fresh issues and remanded the case for findings on them to be recorded. Of the issues thus remanded the two main issues were whether the appellants are in possession of the property and whether they had a subsisting title to it through their vendors and the findings of the Sub-Judge were that the appellants are in possession of the property but they have no subsisting title to it as Habibullah the original vendor had no subsisting title to convey. On the receipt of the findings the District Court proceeded to dispose of the appeal and was of the opinion that the appellants "were endeavouring to obtain amenities not possessed by the house before to the detriment of defendant's user of the court-yard and held that this is not a case in which an injunction should be granted." At the conclusion of his judgment the learned Judge remarked as follows. "In the circumstance I consider it unnecessary to go into the merits of the case and decide the title of the parties in this suit for an injunction and I, therefore, dismiss the appeal with costs." On second appeal to this Court a Divisional Bench remanded the case to the First Appellate Court for recording a finding as to whether the appellants are the owners of the poperty in suit for if the judgment of the lower Court was reversed and the injunction sought by the appellants was granted, it would be a mere "brutum fulmen" if the ownership of the property in dispute had not been established in the first instance. The finding of the District Judge on remand is that appellants are the owners of the plaint property. The appeal has now been further argued before us by Mr. Lula for the appellants and Mr. Thawardas for the respondents.

As regards the appellants' purchase of the house in suit from Sher Mahomed and Ghulam

Hussain the sons of Faiz Mahomed, there can be no reasonable doubt. The two sale-deeds, Exs. 39 and 40, appear to me uncontestable. Now Ex. 95 is the certified copy of the sale-deed of the suit-property by Habibullah to Faiz Mahomed, both of whom are now dead and this sale-deed is attested by both Sultan Bibi and Musammat Nawab. Mere attestation by a person does not necessarily import knowledge of the contents of the document attested, but there may arise circumstances from which an inference may be deducible that the attesting witness was aware of the nature of the document, he or she was attesting. In the case of Lakhpati v. Ramabodhsing (1) it was held that "the question whether attestation of a document should be held to imply assent is a question of fact and must be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case and High Court cannot entertain it in second appeal." It is the mother and sister and not distant strangers that have attested the sale-deed by Habibullah and it seems difficult to conceive that such close relatives would not be aware of the nature of the document to which they were asked to append their signatures. It is not usual for Mahomedan purdahnishin women to attest documents and the attestation in the present case was in all probability insisted upon by the purchaser for, as Sultan Bibi and Nawab lived in the house that was being sold along with Habibullah it was intended obviously to bind them by the sale effected by Habibullah. If the attestation was to be confined exclusively to the signature of the vendor, it is most unlikely that the purchaser would be satisfied with the attestation of two witnesses so closely related to the executant. I am, therefore, of the opinion that both Sultan Bibi and Nawab were well acquainted with the contents of the sale-deed at the time of the attestation. Now respondent No. 1 derives his title through Musammat Nawab and the latter would be estopped from contending that Habibullah had no right to sell or was not the owner of the property in dispute. As remarked in the case of Kandasami Pillay v. Rangasamwy Nainar (2). "If A with the knowledge that the recital in a sale-deed that the land thereby conveyed belongs to B and is in B's enjoyment as owner attests the sale-deed executed by B in favour of the plaintiff he is estopped from setting up thereafter his title to the land." No actual verbal representation is necessary to give rise to an estoppel. It is quite enough that the conduct of a party leads another to act in the belief that he asserts no claim to the property. As observed by the Privy Council in Sarat Chundar Dey v. Gopal Chundar Laha (3) "the principle on which the law and statute rest is that it would be most inequitable and unjust to a person that if another by a representation made or conduct amounting to representation has induced him to act as he would otherwise not have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to the loss and injury of the person who acted on it." As Musammat Nawab, therefore, would be clearly estopped from contending that Habibullah had no right to convey the property to Faiz Mahomed, respondent No. 1 who dervies his title through her is equally debarred.

There is, however, another formidable obstacle which would shut out Nawab conclusively from asserting her title to the property in suit. I have already referred to the execution proceedings wherein Nawab obstructed the appellants in obtaining possession and an order adverse to Nawab was passed. Now under article 11-A of the Indian Limitation Act the period of limitation for the unsuccessful claimant to establish the right which he claims to the present possession of the property comprised in the order is one year from the date of the order, and it has been held in a series of cases that where the summary order contemplated by O. XXI, rr. 63 and 103 is not overruled in a regular suit brought within a year it becomes conclusive and binding on all persons who were parties to it, and also on their successors-in-title, and they are thereafter precluded from asserting their rights, even as defendants. In Nemagauda v. Paresha (4), it was observed. "The authorities are quite clear about the general position that the unsuccessful objector or intervenor whether he happens to be plaintiff or defendant in the regular suit is equally bound by the order in the miscellaneous proceedings, and the only way open to him is to establish his right by a regular suit brought within 12 months at the expiration of which period the order becomes conclusive as against him." To the same effect is the case of Surnamoyi Dasi v. Ashuthosh Goswami (5). When, therefore, a claim is disallowed and no suit is brought within a year the claimant is thereafter precluded from asserting in any capacity: Rustomji's Limitation Act, page 252. Now admittedly through an order adverse to Nawab was passed in February 1913, she took no steps till her death which took place in 1917 to establish her claim to the property in suit and the order of the Sub-Judge was conclusive and binding upon her and her successors-in-title.

The position, therefore, reduces itself to this, that Nawab's claim to the house in dispute cannot be considered and with it respondents No. 1's claim to the house also fails.

The question then remains whether appellants have proved their title to the property. This was the issue sent down to the District Court on remand, and it was held that appellants have proved their title to the property and with its finding on this point we concur. There, therefore, only remains the point for decision as to whether appellants are entitled to the injunction they seek.

The Sub-Judge disallowed the injunction as he was of opinion that the opening of the door in question would disturb the occupants of the other houses who use the court-yard, and as he held that plaintiffs had not proved their title to the house in which the door was to be opened, there was no possibility of granting them the relief they sought; the First Appellate Court refused the injunction as it was of opinion that its grant would be detrimental to the user of the court-yard by the respondents. We have had a sketch of the house and court-yard and the adjacent buildings abutting on it placed before us and from it, it appears and it is admitted that the court-yard is common to the houses south and west of it. At the time of the suit the house in question consisted of one large room with two door-ways, one opening on the east and the other into the court-yard. The two appellants who are, a Hindu and a Mahomedan propose to partition the room by the construction of a wall, running from south to north, and as the result of this will be that both the existing doors will fall in the eastern tenement it is absolutely essential to have an opening of the western part of the building. The only manner in which this can be done is by opening a door, leading to the court-yard. Now it appears that the court-yard is utilized by the woman-folk of the adjacent houses for sleeping purposes and the main contention of the respondents against the grant of the injunction is that their privacy will be entirely destroyed if the appellants are permitted to open the door they desire to do. But the court-yard is admitted not to be the exclusive property of the respondents, and the appellants have as much a right to its user as the respondents. One door of the house in suit already opens on to the court-yard and the occupants of this house can have easy access to it by this door, and the opening of another door a few yards away from the first would not make any appreciable difference since the privacy of the respondents could be as easily disturbed by the door in the eastern as by the door in the western tenement. It appears to me that the real objection lies to the intrusion by a Hindu owner on what has hitherto been a close preserve of a Mahomedan family, but this would be no ground for disallowing the injunction as the appellants have a legal right to the relief they claim. No doubt the Courts are given discretion to grant or withhold an injunction, but in the present case if the injunction is withheld it would be tantamount to depriving the appellants of the user of the property which they own, for it is not to be expected that a Hindu and a Mahomedan family could occupy one room jointly. The house can be brought into use only by means of a partition wall, and to make both the apartments habitable, the door proposed to be opened by the appellants is indispensable. I am of opinion that the appellants have made out a good case for the relief they seek and, I would reverse the decrees of the lower Courts and direct an injunction to issue to the repondents in terms of the prayer in the plaint with costs on the respondents both of this Court and the Lower Courts.

Madgavkar, A. J. C.—I concur on the question of the effect of attestation. I would only refer to the very recent decision of the Privy Council, Pandurang Krishnaji v. Markandeya Tukaram (6). On the question of title the plaintiff's case appears to me stronger, because, firstly it is not proved that the property belonged to the father of Habibullah and Dada Nawab, secondly, the fact that Dada Nawab and her mother, both pardanashin women, brought out on purpose to attest the conveyance by Habibullah, leads to a strong inference of their knowledge of the contents of the conveyance. Thirdly, Dada Nawab took no steps to set aside by suit the order in execution proceedings against her and in favour of the plaintiff. The only point in her favour is her residence there till her death.

On the question of injunction, the joint ownership of the court-yard entitles the plaintiff to the injunction and the question of the creed of the parties is immaterial.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL No. 814 OF 1923.

Present :—Mr. Justice Broadway and Mr. Justice Fforde.

WALI MUHAMMAD AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—APPELLANTS
MUHAMMAD BAKHSH AND OTHERS—PLAINTIFFS AND ALLAH BAKHSH AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS—RESPONDENTS.

Punjab Land Revenue Act (XVII of 1887), s. 44—Record of Rights, entries in—Presumption of correctness—Rebuttal—Extraneous evidence, whether necessary—Pedigree table, entries in, relating to devolution of property—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XLI, r. 27—Appeal second—Additional evidence, whether can be taken.

An entry in a Record of Rights is not necessarily conclusive. It is an entry to which the presumption of correctness attaches under the provisions of section 44 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act unless and until the contrary is proved by legal evidence. If, however, the entry itself is inconclusive, or appears on the face of it to be erroneous, a court would be justified in rejecting it, and it would not be necessary in such a case, to produce extraneous evidence to prove the incorrectness of the entry. The question whether the presumption of correctness attaching to an entry in the Record of rights has been rebutted is one of fact and cannot be examined in second appeal. [p. 1001, col. 1.]

Semble :—R. 27 of O XLI of the Civil Procedure Code does not authorise an Appellate Court to allow the production of additional evidence in second appeal. [p. 1001, col. 2.]

On the 17th of November 1920 the plaintiffs instituted a suit against the defendants claiming possession, by redemption of 200 ghumaons, 6 kanals, 11 marlas of land situate in Mauza Mehmunwalli in the district of Sheikhupura. They alleged that the land in question had been mortgaged by Muhammad Bakhsh and Sultan (Table A) to Miran Bakhsh (Table B) for Rs. 1,200 under a duly registered deed executed on the 15th of March 1880; that Miran Bakhsh had transferred his mortgagee rights to Wali Muhammad, Ali Muhammad and Muhammad Bakhsh (Table C; that the said transferees and their descendants had been since, and were still, in possession of the said land as mortgagees and refused to allow the plaintiffs to redeem the same on payment of the mortgage-money.

Nur Ilahi defendant No. 2 (Table B) and Hakim Ali defendant No. 8 (Table A) put in no appearance. Allah Bakhsh defendant No. 1 (Table B) admitted the allegations made in the plaint. The remaining defendants admitted that the land in suit had been mortgaged to Miran Bakhsh as alleged, but pleaded that they had purchased the land from Muhammad Bakhsh and Sultan in 1890 and had paid off the mortgagees a few months later since when they had held possession as owners and not as mortgagees. Their other pleas are immaterial so far as this appeal is concerned.

Five issues were settled by the Trial Court, of which the first and fourth were as follows :—

(1) Does the relation of mortgagors and mortgagees subsist between the plaintiffs and defendants Nos. 3 to 7 ?

(4) Was the land in suit sold to defendants Nos. 3 to 7 by Sultan and Muhammad Bakhsh ?

These were decided against the plaintiffs and their suit was consequently dismissed with costs.

The plaintiffs thereupon preferred an appeal to the additional District Judge who decreed their claim holding that the defendants Nos. 3 to 7 (Table C) had failed to discharge the onus of proving the fourth issue.

The said five defendants (Table C) have come up to this Court in second appeal and their case has been very ably argued by Mr. Hassan Imam Mr. Tek Chand appeared for the plaintiffs respondents. Mr. Hassan Imam frankly conceded that the onus of proving issues Nos. 1 and 4 had rightly been pleased on the plaintiffs-respondents and appellants respectively. He also admitted that as the appellants had admitted the mortgage a presumption arose in favour of the plaintiffs respondents and that this presumption could only be displaced by the appellants proving the alleged sale in their favour. He claimed, however, that this duty they had discharged by proving that they had been entered as owners of the suit lands in such of the Revenue Records, since the Settlement of 1892-93, as were forthcoming. He urged that the claim made by the plaintiffs-respondents was the outcome of the disturbances that occurred in Gujranwala in 1919 when a great part of the Revenue Records were burnt, and that among the Records thus burnt were the Mutation Registers which would have placed the appellants' case beyond all dispute. In the absence of these registers, however, reliance was placed on the Jamabandis of 1892-93, 1905-06, 1916-17 and certain entries in the pedigree-table of the village proprietors, and it was argued that the learned Additional District Judge had not attached that weight to the presumption of their correctness that was due to them owing to the provisions of section 44 of the Land Revenue Act. Now it cannot be denied that such Revenue Records as have been produced show the appellants as owners of this land and section 44 of the Land Revenue Act undoubtedly enacts that entries in such records shall be presumed to be correct.

The learned Additional District Judge has, however, fully realised this aspect of the case and has considered and weighed this evidence with all possible care.

In the pedigree-tables referred to there appear certain entries relating to the devolution of lands in the village, and it is on these entries that Mr. Hassan Imam lays stress. The learned Additional District Judge has examined these entries very carefully and has come to the conclusion that no reliance can be placed on their correctness. It was contended that the learned Additional District Judge was not at liberty to come to this conclusion merely on an examination of the entries themselves, but was bound by section 44 of the Land Revenue Act to hold them to be correct till some extraneous evidence had been produced showing their incorrectness. This view cannot be accepted. The pedigree-tables, are, after all, pieces of evidence. They carry with them certain presumptions, but they can be examined and scrutinised with a view to determining their value without any such evidence as is suggested by the learned Counsel. Mr. Tek Chand contended that the presumption of correctness attached only to the pedigree-tables so far as relationships were concerned and that any entries relating to the devolution of property were unauthorised and, therefore, no presumption arose with regard to them. This contention is supported by the dictum of Martineau, J. in an unreported case (Civil Appeal No. 2398 of 1920) in which it was held that " although a presumption of correctness attaches to the pedigree-table (which is part of the Record-of-Rights under section 44 of the Land Revenue Act, I do not think that that presumption extends to an entry made in the pedigree-table with respect to an extraneous matter entirely unconnected with the question of the relationship of the persons named in the table." On the other hand Mr. Hassan Imam referred to Douie's Punjab Land Administration Manual and the same learned author's Settlement Manual. In the latter of these treatises in Appendix VIII, page XXIV, is given the form in which pedigree-tables are to be prepared. Paragraphs 8 and 10 of this document seem to authorise the making of entries relating to the devolution of lands in the village, although Mr. Hassan Imam was unable to show under what authority that Appendix was promulgated or whether it was in force in 1891. Assuming, however, that these entries were made in accordance with the requirements of the law, an entry in a Record-of-Rights is not necessarily conclusive. It is an entry to which the presumption of correctness attaches under the provisions of section 44 of the Punjab land Revenue Act unless and until the contrary is proved by legal evidence. If the entries themselves are inconclusive or appear on the face of them to be erroneous, a Court would be justified in not accepting them. In the present case the learned Additional District Judge has pointed out that the case of the appellants is opposed to the entries in the pedigree-tables and has declined to accept them. In other words he has held that the presumption of correctness astaching to them as entries in a Record-of-Rights has been rebutted. This is a question of fact which cannot be examined in second appeal, vide Ram Kumar Chackerbutty v. Birindra Kishore manikya (1).

Apparently recognising that his position in regard to the entries in the pedigree-tables was weak, Mr. Hassan Imam desired to be allowed to tender fresh evidence. This evidence consisted of certain remarks in the micl haqqiat or Record-of-Rights. He contended that the appellants had only discovered the existence of this new evidence within the last three or four months and that they had then, without any undue delay, moved this Court to send for the said misl haqqiat. It appears, however, that the Special Kanungo was examined and when he gave his evidence it is admitted that these particular documents were in his possession in Court. He was asked no questions in regard to them and apparently neither the appellants nor their Counsel thought it worth while to make an examination of the Revenue Records until long after the learned Additional District Judge had delivered his judgment. Mr. Tek Chand contended that r. 27 of O. XLI, Civil Procedure Code, did not 'authorise an Appellate Court to allow the production of additional evidence in second appeal, Mr. Hassan Imam referred to Indarjit Pratap Bahadur Sahi v. Amar Singh (2) where their Lordships of the Privy Council held that "the jurisdiction of an Appellate Court under O. XLI, r. 27 (1) (b) of the Civil Procedure Code, to admit additional evidence is not confined to cases in which the Court itself discovers a lacuna or defect and requires evidence to fill up or remedy it." They also held that the Judicial Committee has unrestricted power to admit documents where sufficient ground is shown for their not having been produced at the initial stage of the litigation." In that case, however, as pointed out by Mr. Tek Chand, the High Court of Patna was sitting as a Court of first appeal and the authority, therefore, is not in point. Further, there seems to have been no valid reason for the delay in the production of this evidence. As stated above this evidence was actually in Court during the trial and the failure to produce it was obviously due to the slackness on the part of the appellants and their legal advisers in failing to inspect the records with proper care. This evidence was not tendered in the lower Appellate Court and we cannot see our way to admit it at this late stage, even assuming we had power to do so.

Mr. Hassan Imam admitted that the onus of proving the sale lay on his clients. Whether a sale had or had not been effected is a question of fact and this question has been decided against the appellants by the learned Additional District Judge. In coming to his decision the learned Additional District Judge has not contravened any legal principles and

SIND JUDICIAL COMMISSIONER'S COURT.

SECOND CIVIL APPEAL NO. 23 OF 1920.

August 14, 1922.

Present :—Mr. Kennedy, J. C., and Mr. Madgavkar, A. J. C.

JAMNOMAL GURDINOMAL—APPELLANT
versus
GOPALDAS AND ANOTHER—RESPONDENTS.

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 47, 144—Restitution—Sale, whether can be set aside—Auction-purchaser, position of—Bona fide purchaser, who is—Decree set aside by suit, effect of.

The language of clause (1) of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code is wider than that of the corresponding section 583 of the Code of 1882 and the addition of clause (2) barring suits necessarily implies the widest possible construction of clause (1). [p. 1003, col. 1.]

The question of restitution of property sold under a decree, is restricted not merely to the parties themselves but also extends to their representatives within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the term 'representatives' includes not merely legal representatives, but also assignees. [p. 1003, col. 1 & col. 2].

While as against a decree-holder who is himself the auction-purchaser, a sale can be set aside and restitution made, an innocent purchaser through Court cannot be so disturbed. [p. 1004, col. 1.]

By the phrase "bona fide or innocent purchaser" as distinguished from the case where the decree-holder is himself the auction purchaser, the Courts imply the test of knowledge of the pending proceedings whether by appeal or otherwise to set aside a decree, and opportunity to defend his own interests in those proceedings. [p. 1004, col. 2.]

The fact that the decree which was executed by sale was set aside, not in appeal, but by subsequent litigation, does not affect the question of restitution. [p. 1005, col. 1].

Case-law discussed.

Appeal from the order of the Assistant Judge, Sukkur.

Mr. Kimatrai Bhojraj, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Dipchand Chandumal and Tahilram Maniram, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The appellant Jamnomal, was a minor in 1910. His elder brother, Manghanmal and his father Gurdinomal filed an award in which the appellant was declared entitled to a third share of certain property. Dayaram, respondent No. 2, mortgagee of the property from Manghanmal filed an award in 1910 by which the property, including the appellant's share became liable for the mortgage amount. The latter award was filed in suit No. 114 of 1910, and in execution by Dayaram, the property including the appellant's share was attached and sold by auction through Court, and purchased by the respondent No. 1, Gopaldas in February 1914. In December 1913, after the attachment, but before the sale, the appellant brought suit No. 306 of 1913 against Dayaram and the other parties to the mortgage-decree, for a declaration that the appellant's one-third share was not liable on Dayaram's decree. After the purchase by the respondent No. 1, the appellant applied to implead the latter in his suit. Gopaldas, however, objected and the objection was allowed. The appellant's suit against Dayaram and the other parties then proceeded, but was dismissed in the Trial Court. The appellant failed in first appeal, but succeeded in second appeal in this Court, which held that the mortgage-decree as against the appellant was null and void and the appellant's share was not liable. The appellant now seeks restitution under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure against the auction-purchaser Gopaldas and the mortgagee-decree-holder Dayaram.

The Court of first instance ordered that the appellant should be placed in possession of his one-third share and the remainder re-sold. This order was set aside in first appeal by the Assistant Judge who ordered that the appellant should merely recover a third of the purchase amount from the respondent No. 2, Dayaram, but held that he was not entitled to any restitution as against the respondent No. 1 Gopaldas. The appellant appeals to this Court.

It is contended for the appellant that the order in first appeal does not grant the appellant the complete restitution to which he is entitled, whether under section 144 of the Code of Civil Procedure or under the inherent powers of the Court under section 151. For the respondent No. 2, it is contended that the lower Appellate Court passed an order for which none of the parties asked. For the respondent No. 1 (Gopaldas) it is urged that he was not a party either to the mortgage-decree or to the subsequent suit by the appellant and, therefore, no remedy lies against him under section 144; and further, that as a bona fide auction-purchaser through Court, the sale to him cannot be set aside. He is not a representative either of the auction-purchaser or of the judgment-debtor, and the doctrine of 'lis pendens' has no application in his case.

The language of clause (1) of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code is wider than that of the corresponding section 583 of the Code of 1882 and the addition of clause (2) barring suits necessarily implies the widest possible construction of clause (1). Even under the Code of 1882 their Lordships of the Privy Council in Prosunno Kumar v. Kalidas Sanyal (1) observed "It is of the utmost importance that all objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible. Their Lordships are glad to find that the Courts in India have not placed any narrow construction on the language of section 244, and that when a question has arisen as to the execution, discharge or satisfaction of a decree between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser who is no party to the suit, is interested in the result has never been held a bar to the application of the section." And it has been justly held that "section 583 must be read with section 244," corresponding to section 47 of the present Code, Jamininath v. Dharmadas (2). So read it would appear that the question of restitution of property sold under a decree, is restricted not merely to the parties themselves but also extends to their representatives within the meaning of section 47. The term 'representatives' includes not merely legal representatives, but also assignees: Govindappa v. Hanumanthappa (3). Where the decree-holder is himself the auction purchaser at a Court sale, he is liable under section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code: Pray Narain v. Kamakhia Singh (4).

On the question whether a stranger auction purchaser is a representative whether of the decree-holder or of the judgment-debtor, there has been some difference of opinion, as pointed out by Mr. Mulla in his Code of Civil Procedure. But even the High Court of Bombay which held that "the auction-purchaser is not a representative of the judgment-debtor;" Narsinbhat v. Bando Krishna (5) and held in Gokulsingh v. Kishansing (6) that "if the question raised by the judgment-debtor as to the legality of the court-sale is virtually one between the parties to the suit, (that is, between decree-holder and the judgment-debtor, and if in the decision and result of that question the auction-purchaser is interested, the judgment-debtor ought not to be allowed to attack the sale in a suit."

This Court, in Gokalsingh v. Awatmal (7) held that "the auction-purchaser, was a representative of the judgment-debtor within the meaning of section 244 of the Code of 1882 and was rightly joined in execution proceedings as such." On these grounds we must hold that the respondent No. 1 was rightly joined as a party to the present application.

It is, however, undeniable that, in regard to a bona fide auction-purchaser, the Courts are reluctant to set aside the sale. It was observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Rewa Mahton v. Ramkishensingh (8) that "If a Court ordering a sale in execution of decree, has jurisdiction, a purchaser of the property sold, is not bound to enquire into the correctness of the judgment upon which the execution issues." Again in Zain-ul-abdin-khan v. Mahomed Asghar Alikhan (9) it was held that " There is a great distinction between the decree-holders who came in and purchased under their own decree which was afterwards reversed on appeal and the bona fide purchasers who bought at the sale in execution of the decree to which they were not parties and at a time when that decree was a valid decree, and when the order for the sale was a valid order."

These decisions have been followed in India in numerous cases such as Piarilal v. Hanifun-Nissa Bibi (10), Meda Chinna Subbamma v. Papirddigari Chinnayya (11); Paresh Nath v. Hari Charan (12).

While, therefore it has been held by all the High Courts including the Bombay High Court as in Shivbai v. Yesso (13) that while as against a decree-holder who is himself the auction-purchaser, a sale can be set aside and restitution made, it is equally clear that an innocent purchaser through Court cannot ordinarily be so disturbed.

On the other hand, section 144 merely gives effect to the principle enunciated by Lord Chairns in the case of Rodger v. The Comptoir D'Escompte De Paris (14) " one of the first and the highest duties of all Courts is to take care that the act of the Court does no injury to any of the suitors. And when the expression 'the act of the Court' is used, it does not mean merely the act of the Primary Court or of any intermediate Court of appeal, but the act of the Court as a whole, from the lowest Court which entertains jurisdiction over the matter up to the highest Court which finally disposes of the case. It is the duty of the aggregate of those tribunals, if I may use the expression' to take care that no act of the Court in the course of the whole of the proceedings does an injury to the suitors in the Court."

The utmost relief which could be granted to the appellant as against the respondent No. 1 would be to set aside the sale to the extent of one-third and to place the appellant in possession of that share. The question in this regard, therefore, depends upon whether the respondent No. 1 can be considered to be a completely innocent purchaser.

By the phrase "bona fide or innocent purchaser" as distinguished from the case where the decree-holder is himself the auction-purchaser, the Courts imply the test of knowledge of the pending proceedings whether by appeal or otherwise to set aside a decree, and opportunity to defend his own interests in those proceedings. This is clear from the observations of the Privy Council already quoted above. In the present case it is admitted that the respondent No. 1 the auction-purchaser was a younger brother and a member of the joint-family and lived with his elder brother, the Pleader, who represented Dayaram throughout. The question of the extent of the respondent No. 1's knowledge of these proceedings was raised by the appellant from the outset. And it was in order to decide this point without further evidence that this admission above of the relationship and joint living of the respondent No. 1 with Dayaram's Pleader was admitted. It is impossible to believe upon this admission that even at the time of this purchase the respondent No. 1 could have been ignorant of the appellant's suit to set aside the attachment and execution proceedings in respect of his own share. For the purposes of the present application therefore we must differ from the learned Assistant Judge and hold that the respondent No. 1 when he purchased was aware of these proceedings. There is no doubt that immediately after his purchase he was formally made aware of them by the notice in which the appellant sought to implead him as a party. It is a matter of regret that he was not allowed to be joined, but was permitted to remain aloof so as to make the present objections and protract the proceedings. He knew of these proceedings, and even now there is no allegation that the suit by the appellant was not seriously contested by Dayaram. In fact the failure of the appellant in the first two Courts is sufficient proof that Dayaram supported as far as he possibly could, his own execution proceedings and the sale thereunder. If, therefore, the respondent No. 1 knew these facts at the time of the purchase, was aware of the pending litigation and the appellant's position in regard to the attachment and the sale of his one-third share, if further, the appellant gave him express opportunity to join as defendant and defendant maintained the sale, but the respondent No. 1 declined to do so, and left it to Dayaram alone to uphold the same, then it appears to us that he does not fall within the category of " a bona fide stranger auction-purchaser," against whom the sale cannot be set aside. If, for instance in the proclamation of sale, the attaching Court had expressly mentioned the pending suit by the appellant and had sold the appellant's right, title and interest in the property subject to the final result of such litigation, the respondent No. 1 would have been bound to make restitution in case the applicant succeeded. The knowledge of the respondent No. 1 and the opportunity given to him are not very different from the circumstances of this hypothesis. These circumstances sufficiently distinguish the case from cases such as Shivlal Bhagwan v. Shambhu Prasad Parvati Shankar (15). The respondent No. 1, auction-purchaser's interests were identical as far as the up-holding of Dayaram's execution proceedings and auction-purchase went, with the interests of Dayaram, and to that extent he may be said to be his representative; Gulzarilal v. Madhoram (16); and the fact that he declined to join as defendant though expressly invited, and was, therefore, absent in the suit by the appellant, does not prevent restitution ; Gurudhuj Prasad Singh v. Baijumal (17).

The fact that the decree which was executed by sale was set aside not in appeal, but by subsequent litigation does not in these circumstances help the respondent No. 1 for the purposes of restitution; Ghulam Mahomed v. Lalchand (18) ; and the appellant is entitled to restitution Shamsundarlal v. Kaisar Zamani Begam (19). As their Lordships of the Privy Council observed in Prag Narain v. Kamakhiasing (4) " even if the point were doubtful, their Lordships would not be disposed at this stage of the proceedings to permit the expense, and delay of a separate suit. Prag Narain v. Kamakhiasing (4).

The sale, however, as regards the judgment-debtors other than the respondents stands ; and between setting aside a sale and deciding that plaintiff's right was not affected by it, there is a wide difference ; Motilal v. Karrabuldin (20).

The proper order of restitution as against the respondent No. 1 appears to be that the appellant should be placed in joint possession of his one-third share of the property sold, the respondent No. 1 being allowed to retain possession of the remainder.

The further equities as between the two respondents have also to be considered. The decree and sale to the extent of one-third having been held void by the Court, there appears no reason why the decree-holder respondent No. 2 Dayaram should be allowed to retain the entire sale-proceeds. His liability is clear and the respondent No. 1, the auction-purchaser is entitled in our opinion to obtain one-third of the purchase amount back from the respondent No. 2 Dayaram. As the respondent No. 1 has been in possession, it is not necessary to award mesne profits or interest. As regards costs, the appellant having succeeded, the respondent No. 2 must pay appellant's costs throughout, the respondent No. 1, bearing his own.

The appeal is therefore, allowed, the decree of the lower Court set aside and a decree made in the terms above.

JUDGMENT.—The plaintiffs in this case seek to set aside a sale-deed of a certain fixed rate tenancy, which was executed by Richhpal Pande in favour of the defendants on the 8th of June 1911. One of the plaintiffs is the brother of Richhpal Pande; the other plaintiffs are his sons. The allegation of the plaintiffs was that they were living jointly with Richhpal Pande, that the said property was their ancestral property and that Richhpal Pande transferred the same without any legal necessity. The sale was made for Rs. 375. The Trial Court found that Rs. 101 out of the sale consideration represented the amount taken for legal necessity, but the lower Appellate Court held that the amount taken for legal necessity was Rs. 275-3-0. The Court of first instance had decreed the claim for possession on payment of Rs. 101 to the defendants-vendees, but the lower Appellate Court dismissed the claim in its entirety, observing that Rs. 275-3-0 represented the bulk of the sale consideration.

The question in such cases, however, is not whether the consideration which was taken for legal necessity formed the bulk of the consideration, but whether the portion which was not taken for legal necessity was such a small portion as might reasonably be left out of account. In Girdharee Lall v. Kantoo Lall (1) the sale of a certain ancestral property, effected by a father for the payment of his debts, was upheld, though a small part of the consideration was not accounted for. Their Lordships there observed : "There is no suggestion either that the bond or the decree was obtained benami for the benefit of the father, or merely for the purpose of enabling the father to sell the family property and raise money for his own purpose. There is nothing of the sort suggested and nothing proved. On the contrary, it was proved that the purchase-money for the estate was paid into the bankers of the fathers and credit was given to them with the bankers for the amount, and that the money was applied partly to pay off the decree, partly to pay off a balance which was due from the fathers to the bankers, and partly to pay Government revenue, and then there was some small portion of which the application was not accounted for. But it is not because there was a small portion which was not accounted for, that the son, probably at the instigation of the father, has a right to turn out the bona fide purchaser who gave value for the estate and to recover possession of it with mesne profits.

The point for determination in each case, therefore, is whether the portion of the consideration, which was not taken for legal necessity, was such a small part as ought not to be taken into account in determining whether the sale should be set aside or upheld. It is not always possible for the manager of a joint

(1) 1 I. A. 321 at p. 332 ; 14 B. L. R. 187 ; 22 W. R. 56 ; 3 Sar. P. C. J. 380 (P. C.).

Hindu family to sell property exactly for the amount for which the legal necessity might exist. He might be able to raise a loan by a mortgage, but it might not always be possible for him to find a mortgagee willing to take a mortgage of the property for the amount required, unless the security given leaves a sufficient margin to cover the principal and interest that might eventually fall due on the transaction. In many cases the sale of a portion might be out of the question and fail to command either a purchaser or its proper value.

The property here sold was a fixed rate tenancy, measuring 2·48 acres and assessed to a small rent, but probably yielding a considerable profit to the family. The amount required to meet the legal necessity was only Rs. 275-3-0, and it is not possible to say that Richhpal Pande could not have sold a portion of the property and raised the money that was required for the purpose of meeting the family requirements, and thus saved the rest of the property for the family use.

In Gobind Singh v. Baldeo Singh (2) and Ram Dei Kunwar v. Abu Jafar (3) sales have been set aside under similar circumstances. In Nathu Ram v. Kanhaiya Lal (4) the same question had arisen, and, following the above decisions, the sale was not upheld as the portion of the consideration for which no legal necessity had been established, was not such a trifling amount as could be left out of account. As there pointed out, it is difficult to decide cases of this nature upon any fixed arithmetical principle, and the circumstances established in each case have to be taken into consideration, with the nature of the property, to determine whether the amount, which represented the money not taken for legal necessity, was such a small or trifling sum as might be left out of account in determining whether the transaction should be upheld or annulled.

A reference has also been made to the decision in The Deputy Commissioner of Kheri v. Khanjan Singh (5). In that case the sale was annulled on payment of the amount for which the legal necessity was found to have been established. In Felaram Roy v. Bagalanand (6), stress was laid on the fact that "it would manifestly be impossible and possibly prejudicial to the interest of the estate, if the widow were held to be bound in every instance to sell property, for payment of a debt due from her husband, for exactly the sum due to the creditor." But that difficulty does not exist here, because a portion of the fixed rate tenancy could at any rate have been sold in order to raise the amount for which the legal necessity existed. In the circumstances the entire sale cannot be upheld.

We allow the appeal accordingly, set aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court and give the plaintiffs-appellants a decree for possession of the disputed property on payment of Rs. 275-3-0 within six months from this date. In case of payment, the plaintiffs will get their proportionate costs from the contesting defendants in all the Courts. If they fail to pay the said amount as above directed, the suit shall stand dismissed and the contesting defendants will get their costs from the plaintiffs-appellants in all the Courts.

Letters Patent (Bom) cl. 12—Mortgage suit—Property and mortgagor, outside jurisdiction—High Court, power of.

The Bombay High Court has power to entertain a mortgage suit even though the mortgagor resides, and the mortgaged property is situate, outside its territorial jurisdiction, where the cause of action arises within its jurisdiction. [p. 1008, col. 2.]

Mr. Campbell, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. Khan, for the Defendants.

JUDGMENT.—In this suit a preliminary question as to jurisdiction has been raised on behalf of defendants Nos. 2 and 3 who have filed their written statements, though the point is not raised in their written statements.

It is urged that as the property mortgaged is situated outside the limits of the original jurisdiction of the High Court this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain the suit on a mortgage-bond relating to such property. In the present case the property is situated at Karachi and the defendants live at Poona. The debt is payable at Bombay or Poona or Karachi at the choice of the mortgagee under the bond and for the purpose of the present point it must be assumed that the debt is payable in Bombay and that apart from the mortgage the suit to recover the debt would be within the jurisdiction of this Court. It is conceded that the contention that this Court has no jurisdiction to entertain this suit to enforce the mortgage in question is opposed to the ruling in Holkar v. Dadabhai Cursetji (1). Since that decision the practice of this Court has been to entertain such suits. But the learned Counsel for defendants Nos. 2 and 3 relies upon Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dassi Debi (2), and contends that the view taken in Holkar v. Dadabai (1) must be taken to have been overruled. He relies upon the following passage in the judgment at page 120 of the report :—

"The deed, therefore, could not be registered there nor had the Court of Ordinary Original Jurisdiction at Fort William in Bengal any jurisdiction to entertain the suit upon the mortgage bond and its decree is of no validity."

On behalf of the plaintiff it is urged that the Bombay view has not been considered in that case, that the decisions of this Court were not cited before their Lordships and that even after the decision in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dassi Debi (2) the Court of Appeal has adhered to the view taken in Holkar v. Dadabhai (1) and that the practice in this Court has not been altered. Mr. Campbell has relied upon the unreported judgment of Scott, C. J. and Heaton, J., in Venkatrao Sethupathy v. Khimji Assur Virij (3).

It is hardly necessary for me to examine the point on its merits apart from the decisions on the point. Speaking for myself I find it difficult to reconcile the view taken by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dassi Debi (2), with the decision in Holkar v. Dadabhai (1) and I should have been bound to give effect to that view, had it not been for a subsequent decision of the Court of Appeal which also is binding upon me. I have read the unreported judgment of the Court in Appeal with care. It is true that there is no reference therein to the case of Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dassi Debi (2), but it is subsequent to the decision in Harendra's case and I have no reason to think and I would not be justified in assuming that Harendsa's case was not considered by the Court of appeal. The learned Chief Justice has approved of the view taken in Holkar v. Dadabhai. (1) It is common ground that the practice of this Court has been consistently to entertain such suits even after the judgment in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dassi Debi (2). It is really for the Court of Appeal or the Privy Council to reconsider this point if at all. So far as this Court is concerned the point must be treated as concluded by the judgment in Venkatrao Sethupathi v. Khimji Assur Viri. I, therefore, hold that the Court has jurisdiction to entertain this suit.

Arbitration, reference to, what amounts to—Intention of parties—Error of law, what amounts to—Award specifying amount payable in pounds—Rate of exchange not specified—Uncertainty.

Where it appears from the terms of an agreement for the settlement of disputes that the intention of the parties was that there should be an inquiry in the nature of a judicial inquiry, and that their respective cases should be heard and a decision arrived at upon the evidence, there is a reference to arbitration. [p. 1010, col. 1.]

A contract for the purchase of goods contained the following clause;—"In the unlikely event of our failing to arrive at an amicable settlement of any disputes, claims or allowances we should be quite willing that the matter should be referred to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, with the proviso that if they be unable to agree they should nominate a third party as their umpire and that the decision of the surveyors or their umpire should be binding on both parties."

Held, that it was the express intention of the parties that all disputes between them arising out of the contract should be referred to arbitrators for decision. [p. 1010, col. 2.]

A failure to pay a claim constitutes a matter in difference between the parties to a submission. [p. 1010, col. 2.]

An award specifying the amount to be paid by one party to the other in pounds sterling but omitting to specify the rate of exchange at which payment is to be made is not bad for uncertainty, but may be remitted to the arbitrators for determining the rate of exchange at which payment is to be made. Mr. Kimatrai Bhojroj, for the Respondents No. 1.

Mr. Dipchand Chandumal, for the Respondents No. 2.

JUDGMENT.—This is a Petition to file an award under the Indian Arbitration Act IX of 1899. Respondents No. 1 are the firm of Beith Stevenson & Co, whose principal place of business is in Manchester. By 3 Indents Nos. 264, 319 and 320, Messrs. Narumal Khemchand and Co. respondents No. 2 contracted to purchase from respondents 1 fifteen packages of piece-goods. The terms and conditions of the three Indents are identical and Ex. 7. which is one of them is signed by respondents 2 as follows: "Accepted subject to the modifications mutually agreed upon in correspondence." Clause 5 of Ex. 7 is thus worded: "All disputes, claims, and allowances are settled by friendly correspondence between Beith Stevenson & Co., and their correspondents and customers, and should they fail to agree, the case may then be submitted by mutual consent to the Chamber of Commerce in Bombay, Calcutta, Karachi or Manchester for arbitration, but Beith Stevenson & Co. are not parties to any other form of arbitration." The material part of the correspondence between the parties which preceded the signing of the Indents by respondents No. 2 is contained in a letter, dated 19th May 1916, addressed by respondents No. 2 to respondents No. 1, wherein they state that "In the event of disputes of any nature that could not be settled amicably these should be referred to two surveyors or arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party. Should the surveyors or arbitrators be unable to agree they should nominate a third party as their umpire. The decision of the arbitrators or surveyors or the umpire shall be binding on both the parties." Respondents No. 1 relied on this letter of the 21st June 1916 and with regard to the aforesaid clause stated as follows: "In the unlikely event of our failing to arrive at an amicable settlement of any disputes, claims or allowances, and if you should not wish to leave a survey to the Karachi Chamber of Commerce; we should be quite willing that the matter should be referred to two surveyors, one to be appointed by each party, with the proviso that if they be unable to agree they should nominate a third party as their umpire and that the decision of the surveyors or their umpire should be binding on both parties." Respondents No. 2 then signed the indents.

Now, the first objection taken to the award is that there was no agreement between the parties to refer their disputes to arbitration under the Indian Arbitration Act, but provision was made only for a survey in the event of any disputes arising and this cannot be taken as justifying a reference under the Indian Arbitration Act. It appears to me that the parties have used the words "surveyor" and "arbitrator" indiscriminately and there can be no doubt that the intention of both was that there should be inquiry in the event of any disputes arising between them. Ex. 7, the indent, provides for a reference of the disputes to arbitrators and the letter of the 19th May 1916 of respondents 2 refers to the disputes being referred to "two surveyors or arbitrators," and though in their letter of 21st June respondents No. 1 refer to surveyors only, I feel no doubt that there was only a confusion of words, and both parties well understood that in the event of any disputes arising out of the contract there was to be a judicial inquiry by two persons appointed by them to determine their disputes, whether they be termed surveyors or arbitrators. Ex. 7, provides for a reference to arbitration of "all disputes" between the parties, which would certainly embrace inter alia disputes as to the shipment being in time, or as to the quality of the goods, and these would form legitimate subject-matter of the decision by arbitrators. No doubt, it is not in every case where two parties intend to be concluded by the decision of a third, that the third person is an arbitrator, for instance, a valuer may not be reckoned an arbitrator in the proper sense, but as pointed out in Russell on Arbitration, p. 44 "Where it appears from the terms of an agreement for the settlement of disputes that the intention of the parties was that there should be an inquiry in the nature of a judicial inquiry, and that their respective cases should be heard and a decision arrived at upon the evidence, there is a reference to arbitration." The Indents in the present case clearly contemplate that it was the express intention of the parties that all disputes between them arising out of the contract should be referred to arbitrators for decision, and the correspondence between the parties prior to the signing of the Indents does not restrict the scope of the dispute or change the character of the third party, to whom the disputes are referred for decision. In my opinion, therefore, the parties had expressly agreed to refer their disputes to arbitration, and respondents No. 1 were justified in demanding a reference to arbitration to dispose of the disputes that had arisen between them. Further another argument which points to the fact that respondents No. 2 clearly understood that disputes between them and respondents No. 1 were to be referred to arbitration appears from the letter of the former, dated the 23rd January 1922 where in response to the demand of respondents No. 1 for the payment of the amount due on the contracts they suggested a reference to "arbitration," and by their letters of the 30th January and 6th February 1922, respondents No 1. called upon respondents No. 2 not to appoint "surveyors," but "arbitrators" to decide the disputes between them.

But, argues Mr. Dipchand, there were no disputes between the parties to be referred to arbitration, and the claim for damages was never intended to be referred to arbitration. It appears from the documentary evidence filed that respondents No. 1 draw drafts on respondents No. 2 for recovery of the value of the goods consigned to them payable to the order of the Mercantile Bank of India, Karachi. These drafts were accepted by respondent No. 2 on presentation, but they subsequently failed to retire them. Respondents No. 1 sent a written notice to respondents No. 2 that if they failed to pay for the goods and take delivery of them they would re-sell them at their account and risk. This they did and claimed the loss thereby sustained. It is abundantly clear from the correspondence that respondents No. 2 never raised any dispute as to the quality or quantity of the goods under the contract or as to the shipment being late, and the only reason for their failure to retire the draft was because the exchange was against them. But a failure to pay a claim constitutes a matter in difference between the parties to a submission, James Finlay v. Jeshanmal Kirpalani (1), and the Indents as I have already remarked provide for a reference to arbitration of "all disputes" between the parties. A dispute between the parties had, therefore, arisen which respondents No. 1 were justified in referring to arbitration. It was next argued that respondents No. 1 were not authorised to re-sell the goods as the indents do not make any provision for a re-sale; this argument has little substance in it, as section 107, Indian Contract Act gives an unpaid vendor the right of re-sale of which due notice was given to the purchaser; and equally the argument that the original cause of action between the parties was merged in the draft and there was no dispute under the contract, appears to me feeble. The drafts drawn on the Mercantile Bank were merely for the purpose of ensuring a satisfactory mode of payment for the value of the goods and they could not and did not extinguish the original cause of action.

Much argument was addressed to me as regards the final objection as to there being a patent error on the face of the award. By his award the arbitrator has awarded the claim of respondents No. 1 in pounds-sterling. It is argued in the first place that the award, gives respondents No. 1 an amount in excess of the draft, secondly, the arbitrator was in error in awarding the claim in pounds-sterling, as it should have been converted in the currency of the realm, and lastly the award is vague and indefinite as it gives no means of ascertaining at what rate of Exchange respondents No. 1 are to be paid.

After the sale of the 15 cases covered by the three indents Nos. 264, 319 and 320, respondents No. 1 submitted to respondents No. 2 an account sale, showing the sum of £1,799-3-3 due to them. A copy of this account sale was also placed before the arbitrator and the arbitrator has awarded respondents No. 1 £1,766-11-4. Of the two drafts—one was for £ 1,407-0 3 for Indents Nos. 319 and 320 and £763-17-3 for Indent No. 264. I am not satisfied that the arbitrator has erred in awarding the amount that he did to respondents No. 1 or that there is any error on the face of the award. The claim against the respondents No. 2 was not on the draft, but was for the the damages sustained by respondents No. 1 by their sale of the goods; a memo of the account was placed before the arbitrator, and respondents No. 2 had an opportunity of challenging its accuracy, the more so as they appeared before the arbitrator at the hearing. I see no reason for not upholding the claim awarded by the arbitrator. It is, however, argued that the award is bad for uncertainty as it decrees the claim in pounds-sterling and the rate of Exchange at which this amount should be paid has not been determined, and this constitutes an error on the face of the award. The recent case of U. M. Chowdhury & Co. v. Jiban Krishna Ghose (2) has laid it down that an error in law on the face of the award must be distinctly collected from the face of the awards or from any paper so connected with the award as to form part of them. In this case also the arbitrator had awarded the amount claimed in pounds-sterling and had said that the rate of Exchange for payment will be calculated at the Telegraphic Transfer rate of the rupee on the date of payment. It was urged in argument that such an award was bad for indefiniteness and uncertainty and the part of the judgment dealing with this argument is as follows:—"The awards did specify definitely the sums in pounds-sterling which were to be paid by the sellers to the buyers, but it was urged that an ambiguity arose by reason of direction as to the calculation of exchange. It is true that the awards did not specify the amounts which had to be paid by the seller in rupees, but in my judgment that is not sufficient ground for remitting the award if the arbitrators have given the rule for calculating the amounts to be paid." In the present case the award is silent as to the rate of Exchange, but I do not on that account consider the award bad for uncertainty as it clearly specifies the amount to be paid in pounds-sterling. All that, I think, need be done is to remit the award to the arbitrator for determining the rate of Exchange at which the amount awarded by him to respondents No. 1, should be paid. The question of costs is reserved.

NAWAB KHAN—DECREE-HOLDER —RESPONDENT.

Pre-emption decree—Failure to comply with terms of decree, effect of.

A compromise decree arrived at in a pre-emption suit provided that if the plaintiff failed to pay to the vendee a certain sum by a certain date his suit shall stand dismissed. Plaintiff paid the sum specified in the decree except 4 annas within the time specified and obtained possession of the pre-empted property. When the defendant discovered the deficiency in the deposit made in Court, he applied for restoration of the pre-empted property to him and dismissal of the plaintiff's suit.

Held (1) that the Court had no jurisdiction to extend the time specified in the decree for payment of the amount ; [p. 1012, col. 2.]

(2) that there was no distinction in this respect between a decree passed on compromise and a decree passed after contest ; [p. 1012, col. 2.]

(3) that the decree not having been complied with the plaintiff's suit must be dismissed and possession of the pre-empted property restored to the defendant. [p. 1013, col. 1.]

Appeal from the order of the District Judge, Gujranwala, dated the 21st April 1922, reversing that of the Munsif, 1st class, Wazirabad, District Gujranwala, dated the 6th December 1921.

Lala Mehr Chand Mahajan, for the Appellants.

Mr. Sagar Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—The respondent sued for possession of land by right of pre-emption and obtained a decree subject to the payment of Rs. 210 of which Rs. 105 were to be paid to a mortgagee and Rs. 105 were to be paid to the vendees within one month, failing which the suit was to stand dismissed. The parties were to bear their own costs. On the appeal of the vendees a compromise was arrived at, by which the amount payable to them was increased by Rs. 73-4-0, and payment was to be made by the 15th August 1919, otherwise the suit would stand dismissed. The decree drawn up by the Appellate Court stated that Rs. 105 were to be paid to the mortgagee, that Rs 248-4-0 were to be paid to the vendees by the 15th August 1919, that the parties should bear their own costs in that Court, and that the rest of the lower Court's decree remained unchanged.

The respondent paid the entire sum except 4 annas and obtained possession of the land. Later on when the vendees applied for the payment to them of the sum deposited by the pre-emptor they discovered that he had paid 4 annas too little. This was brought to the notice of the Munsif, who dismissed the respondent's application for an extension of time for depositing the money. On appeal the District Judge held that the terms of the decree had been substantially complied with, and that as the decree-holder had not been given a parcha specifying the terms, and the decree had been passed on a compromise, the omission to pay 4 annas within the time fixed should be condoned. He accordingly granted the respondent an extension of time, and on the latter paying the sum of 4 annas he directed that the decree passed on the compromise should stand. The vendees have preferred a second appeal.

The omission to give the decree-holder a parcha containing the terms of the decree is quite immaterial as there is no allegation that he was not aware of the terms. He in fact mentioned the terms in the statement which he made at the time of the compromise. The learned District Judge is also wrong in thinking that there is any distinction in law between a decree passed on a compromise and any other decree. Jam Hamid Ali v. Kaim Din (1) which he has cited, is not applicable, for in that case what the pre-emptor was required to do under the decree was, not to pay a sum of money, but to separate off and make over to the defendant a certain area of land, and he fulfilled the condition within the time fixed by ceasing to cultivate that area in order to let the defendant have possession.

In the present case the decree-holder was required to pay a certain sum of money by the 15th August 1919. It was expressly stated in the compromise that if the money were not paid by that date the suit would stand dismissed, and although in the Appellate Court's decree the consequence of a default was not expressly mentioned that decree, after setting forth the conditions which the decree-holder was to fulfil, provided that the rest of the first Court's decree would remain unchanged. The clause in the first Court's decree providing that the suit would stand dismissed if the money were not paid in time must, therefore, be regarded as incorporated in the decree of the Appellate Court, and as the decree-holder did not pay the whole of the money in the time fixed his suit must be considered as dismissed. It makes no difference that the amount which he omitted to pay is small, or that the omission was a mistake, or that it was not discovered till a long time after he had been put in possession of the land. It is argued on his behalf that the Executing Court is functus officio, but this is clearly wrong as the decree could not be fully satisfied until the decree-holder had paid all the money which he was required under the decree to pay.

Kanhaiya Lal v. Mohammad Shafi Khan (2) and Wali Mahomed v. Kapuria Mal (3) are cases similar to the present one. There also after the pre-emptors had been put in possession of the property it was found that they had by mistake paid a little less than the sums which they were required to pay, the deficiency being one anna in one case and one rupee in the other, and it was held that the vendees were entitled to have possession of the property restored to them.

I accordingly accept this appeal, reverse the order of the lower Appellate Court, and restore that of the first Court. As it was by a pure mistake that the respondent did not pay the full amount which the decree required him to do, and the deficiency was only one of four annas, I direct that the parties shall bear their own costs throughout.

ALBERT BONNAN AND BONNAN & COMPANY—RESPONDENTS.

Trade Mark—Ordinary principles, whether apply in India—Tradesmen acquiring goods from manufacturer and reselling them—Competition with manufacturer, whether infringement.

There is nothing to prevent a tradesman acquiring goods from a manufacturer and selling them in competition with him, even in a country into which hitherto the manufacturer or his agent has been the sole importer. [p. 1016, col. 2.]

Ordinary principles of Jurisprudence with regard to trade marks and those forbidding the passing off of goods apply in India. [p. 1017, col. 1.]

Appeal against the Judgment of the Calcutta High Court, reported in 77 Indian Cases 193.

Messrs. F. H. Mangham, A. C. Clauson, L. B. Sebastian and F. H. Bray, for the Appellants.

Mr. S. Hyam, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—Before the year 1901, the Company known as W. D. and H. O. Wills, Limited, had begun to manufacture a particular cigarette which got to be known as Gold Flake or Will's Gold Flake, and which soon acquired a considerable reputation.

In the year 1901, W. D. and H. O. Wills, and various other companies became amalgamated into one Company called the Imperial Tobacco Company (of Great Britain and Ireland), Limited, and the whole business of W. D. and H. O. Wills, Limited, with its good will and trade marks was assigned to the Imperial Tobacco Company (of Great Britain and Ireland), Limited. In September 1902, this last-named Company made an agreement with a Company called the American Tobacco Company by which it was agreed that the American Tobacco Company should confine its trade to the United States and certain islands, and that the Imperial Tobacco Company (of Great Britain and Ireland) Limited, should confine its trade to Great Britain and Ireland, and that these two Companies should form a third to be called the British American Tobacco Company, Limited which should confine its trade to the rest of the world not included in the territories of the two first Companies. And accordingly, the British American Tobacco Company, Limited, was incorporated; and to it the other two Companies assigned their business, good will and trade marks outside their respective territories; and mutual covenants were entered into by the three Companies confining their trades to their respective territories.

At some date not specified in the record, a Company called the British American Tobacco Company (India), Limited, was incorporated to act as distributors in India for the British American Tobacco Company, Limited.

By an agreement made on the 1st September 1910, between the British American Tobacco Company, Limited of the 1st part, the British American Tobacco Company (India), Limited, of the 2nd part, and the appellant Company of the 3rd part, it was agreed that the appellant Company should buy the good will, business rights and other assets of the British American Tobacco Company, Limited, in India and certain other territories, with brands, trade marks, trade names, formulae and recipes, and the sole right and title to use in that territory the name of the British American Tobacco Company, Limited and the names of all firms and companies which it had acquired, and also the good will, business rights and assets of the British American Tobacco Company (India), Limited. This agreement, however, was not perfected by an assignment. By an indenture dated the 11th April 1922, and made between the British American Tobacco Company, Limited, and the appellant Company—but to which the other Company was not a party—the British American Tobacco Company, Limited (so far as it was concerned) performed its agreement to the appellant Company.

The Gold Flake cigarettes in question were sold at one time in tins of fifty cigarettes and afterwards in packets of stiff paper, each containing ten cigarettes. On the Broad flat top of the packets appeared in bold letters, words showing they were Gold Flake cigarettes and the name of W. D. and H. O. Wills, Bristol and London; and on the back with a number of medals, there was an inscription in the following words:—

"Every genuine packet of Gold Flake Cigarettes has the signature thus: W. D. and H. O. Wills.

On one of the ends of the packet—if they were packets to be sold in India by the appellant Company—appeared in very small print:—

"This label is issued by the Imperial Tobacco Co. of India, Ltd.,

Registered Trade Mark.
Successors in India to W. D. and
H. O. Wills Cigarettes, made in England."

If they were manufactured by the British American Company for sale elsewhere, the words, in lettering of the same small size, were —

"Established by W. D. and H. O. Wills, Bristol and London, British American Tobacco Co., Ltd.

Registered Trade Mark.

Bristol, London, Liverpool and Virginia.
Successor. Made temporarily in the U. S. A."

No reliance was placed in argument by either party upon the difference in the two inscriptions at the ends of the packets.

The only other difference between the packets to be used in India and those to be used elsewhere was that the paper for the India pakets was of somewhat stouter material so as to afford a better resistance to damp.

Packets with this distinctive appearance and these trade-marks were manufactured by the British American Tobacco Company, Limited, and imported and distributed by the British American Tobacco Company (India), Limited, from about 1902 till the date of the agreement in 1910; after which date they were imported and distributed by the appellant Company. The manufacture was carried out by the British American Tobacco Company, Limited, at first in England. afterwards temporarily in the United States of America.

In the year 1921 the respondent Bonnan purchased about 21½ millions of Gold Flake cigarettes, surplus stores, sold by the British Army Canteen authorities, the sale being subject to the condition that they were not to be resold in the United Kingdom. These cigarettes had been sold, in the first instance, to the British Canteen Authorities by the British American Company, Limited. After so acquiring them the respondent Bonnan formed the respondent Company, and the respondents shipped a large quantity of these cigarettes to India and offered them for sale there. Thereupon on the 11th May 1922, the appellant Company brought a suit in the High Court at Calcutta, claiming an injunction to restrain the respondents from selling these cigarettes in India.

There being no Trade Marks Act in force in India the case for the appellant Company was rested upon the ordinary rights of every trader to protect his property and to prevent attempts by other traders to avail themselves of his reputation to pass off their goods as his own.

The issues which were settled were accordingly addressed to these points, the more important being those numbered (1), (2), (5) and (8), which are as follows:—

"(1) Does the get-up of the cigarettes described in paragraph 7 of the plaint denote to purchasers in India that such cigarettes are imported by the plaintiff Company?

"(2) Will the sale by the defendant Company of cigerettes in such get-up deceive the purchasers into the belief that the cigarettes have been imported by the plaintiff Company?

"(5) Is the plaintiff entitled as against the defendants either by reason of such importation or by reason of such purchase to prevent defendants from selling cigarettes with such get-up though they have in fact been manufactured by the British American Tobacco Company?

"(8) Are plaintiffs entitled to protect their right by injunction irrespective of consideration mentioned in the first two issues?"

The case was then heard upon oral evidence by Pearson, J., who found on these issues against the appellant Company and dismissed the action; and his decree was affirmed on appeal by Sanderson, C. J., and Richardson, J. It is from this affirmance that the present appeal has been brought.

At the trial some evidence was given on behalf of the appellant Company in order to show that it had a reputation as the sole vendor in India of Gold Flake cigarettes and that the respondents were trading upon this reputation. It is possible for an importer to get a valuable reputation for himself and his wares by this care in selection or his precautions as to transit and storage, or because his local character is such that the article acquires a value by his testimony to its genuineness; and if, therefore, goods though of the same make, are passed off by competitors as being imported by him, he will have a right of action.

But the evidence offered by the appellant Company was met and in the opinion of the learned Judges displaced by the evidence given on behalf of the respondents.

Thus Pearson, J. said:—

"I find, therefore, upon this part of the case that the reputation of the brand of Gold Flake cigarettes in India is the reputation of the maker and not of the plaintiff Company as importers. The reputation originated in the days of Messrs. W. D. and H. O. Wills, the original manufactures, and the efforts of the plaintiff Company have been directed not to creating or acquiring (if such a thing is possible) an importer's reputation for themselves of the brand but in maintaining and developing the reputation of the brand as a manufacturer's brand. The issues, therefore, dependant upon this finding are answered in favour of the defendant."

And Sanderson, C. J.—

"There is no necessity for me to refer to the evidence in detail, for I agree with the learned Judge's finding of fact. In my judgment the sole representation made by the plaintiff's user of the covering of the cigarettes was a representation that the cigarettes were the Gold Flake cigarettes manufactured by the successors of the well known firm of W. D. and H. O. Wills. There is no evidence to justify the alleged representation (on which the plaintiffs relied) that cigarettes, bearing the said wrapper or covering, had come through a particular channel or had been imported by the plaintiffs. In the same way the defendant by using the wrapper or covering was merely representing the cigarettes as Gold Flake cigarettes manufactured by the successors of the well-known firm of W. D. and H. O. Wills, viz., the British American Tobacco Company. This was a perfectly true representation, and the defendant was in no way passing off or attempting to pass off the cigarettes sold by him as the plaintiffs' goods."

And finally Richardson, J.—

"Moreover, the learned Judge Pearson, J., before whom the case came in the first instance, has found, and, in my opinion, on the evidence rightly and conclusively found, that up to the date of the suit the Company had acquired no independent reputation as importers. Nor do they use any distinctive importers' mark."

Their Lordships see no reason to review these concurrent findings. Indeed they were not invited to disturb them as findings of fact; but it was suggested that the learned Judges had arrived at them as mixed findings of fact and law and in so doing had erroneously applied the law.

Another way of putting the case for the appellant Company was suggested by Counsel, which was to treat the first issue as wrongly stated. It ought, it was said, to have run as follows: "Does the get-up of the cigarettes denote the plaintiff's goods?" But even if the appellant Company were to be allowed so to remodel the issue, its case would not be further advanced. The appellant Company has still, as it was admitted, to show that the respondents are selling goods, not the production [or introduction] of the appellant Company, in such a way as to lead customers to believe that they are the goods which the appellant Company has introduced or marketed.

And the answer is twofold: (1) It is an immaterial accident that these particular wares had from 1910 onwards been brought into India by the appellant Company and the appellant Company only, if the appellant Company got no reputation in consequence; (2) The respondents are doing nothing to mislead customers and are breaking no covenants.

In truth, as was observed during the course of the argument, all the business about acquiring title from the British American Tobacco Company, Limited, or the British American Tobacco Company (India), Limited, which latter was never perfectly acquired (see Performing Right Society Limited v. London Theatre of Varieties Limited (1) is beside the question. No Trade Mark or trade reputation of either of these Companies is infringed. The right on which the appellant Company is seeking to rely is something which it claims to have earned for itself since 1910; and this right, as the learned Judges have found, it has failed to establish.

There is nothing to prevent a tradesman acquiring goods from a manufacturer and selling them in competition with him, even in a country into which hitherto the manufacturer or his agent has been the sole importer. It is not likely to be a successful business operation, unless in some exceptional case. This is just such an exceptional case. The British American Tobacco Company, Limited, might, when they sold this large consignment to the British Army Canteen authorities, have required an undertaking that they should not be resold in India or to any one who could lawfully resell in India. This it appears not to have done; and then there arose the question of the disposal after the war of this large surplus stock.

The respondents being unhampered by covenant, are selling goods manufactured by the British American Company as being what they are, namely Wills' Gold Flake cigarettes manufactured by that Company. There is no untruth and no attempt to deceive. The appellant Company says that all genuine Wills' Gold Flake cigarettes sold in India must be their goods. It may be answered that this has been so in times past as a mere matter of fact, and because the appellant Company was protected by a covenant with the manufacturers; but not because it had a title to a monopoly which it could enforce against strangers to the covenant.

The claim of the appellant Company is that it can stop a trader, to whom goods have been lawfully sold under a particular description and by whom they have been lawfully brought under that description, from reselling them under the same description. Such a claim sounds extravagant. It might, however, possibly be maintained, if it could be shown that the time, place or circumstances of the resale imported some representation that the goods were other than what they were. But in this case there is no such time, place or circumstance.

It is not as if the respondents were attempting to pass off as Wills' Gold Flake cigarettes stuff not manufactured by the lawful successors in title of W. D. and H. O. Wills. Any such attempt would be at once restrained at the suit of the lawful successor ; and in India and for India the appellant Company would be the lawful successors.

There is nothing in the judgments in the Courts below or in the opinion which their Lordships are now expressing to give countenance to the idea that the ordinary principles of jurisprudence with regard to trade marks and those forbidding the passing off of goods do not apply in India. But the cigarettes now in dispute are the genuine articles, lawfully acquired from the lawful manufacturers ; and as such the respondents may sell them.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Where a guardian expressly executes a conveyance of the ward's property in his own right, the conveyance passes no title and can be avoided by the ward at any time. The principle that, where there is a doubt as to whether in making a conveyance the guardian has acted for himself or his ward, the executant may be deemed to have lawfully within the scope and in exercise of his authority, is inapplicable to such a case. Appeal against the decree of the Subordinate Judge, 1st Court of Zilla, Backergunge, dated the 27th August 1920, reversing the decree of the Munsiff, 6th Court at Barisal, dated the 31st July 1919.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the plaintiff in a suit for possession upon establishment of title. The disputed land belonged to the father of the plaintiff and passed to him by right of inheritance when his father died. On the 22nd May 1909, when the plaintiff was still an infant, his mother granted a permanent lease of the subject-matter of the litigation to the defendants. On the 20th July 1918, the plaintiff instituted the present suit to eject the defendants on the ground that the lease was unauthorised. The Court of first instance decreed the suit. Upon appeal that decision has been reversed by the Subordinate Judge.

We have examined the lease and we find that it was granted by the lady on the assumption that she was the proprietor in possession, competent to deal with the property. There can be no dispute that this was not the true state of facts. As the defendant has stated in the written statement, a document was first drawn up which purported to transfer the property to the defendants, the mother of the plaintiff professing to act as his natural guardian. When the document was taken to the Registration Office, the registering officer declined to register it on the ground that no permission of the District Judge under the Guardians and Wards Act, authorising the mother to grant a permament lease of the property of her son, was produced. Thereupon, a fresh document, the one now before the Court, was drawn up. The recitals are undoubtedly untrue and there can be no dispute as to their meaning. The lady had no property to deal with as her own and consequently the grant did not create any valid title in the lessee.

Reliance has been placed, however, on the decision of the Judicial Committee in Watson & Co. v. Shamlal Mitter (1) in support of the contention that the document may be construed to mean exactly the reverse of what its language signifies, namely, a lease by the mother, not in her own right, but as the guardian of her infant son who is not even mentioned within its four corners. The case mentioned is, in our opinion, of no assistance to the respondents. There the name of the executant appeared on the face of the document and was followed by the description "mother and guardian of the infant." It was held that the description might be construed to indicate that the deed was executed by the lady on behalf and as guardian of her infant son. This principle of liberal construction of Indian documents inartistically drawn up was applied by the Judicial Committee in the cases of Hunooman Persaud Pandey v. Munraj Koonwaree (2), Hemanta Kumari Debi v. Brojendrakishore Roy Chowdhury (3) and Gopee Mohun Thakoor v. Radha Nath (4) which are all distinguishable. In each instance, the question was one of the intention of the party who executed a document, to be gathered from the language used, and it was pointed out that as there was no suggestion that the lady had claimed any interest in the estate as her own, she might be deemed to have acted on behalf of her infant ward. In the case before us, the history of the document has been disclosed by the defendants themselves. The original document was executed by the lady on behalf of her infant son. A difficulty, real or imaginary, was raised by the registering officer. The document was thereupon deliberately altered, so as to become a deed executed by her in her own right. It is impossible, in such circumstances, to apply the principle that where there may be a doubt as to whether the guardian is acting for himself or for his ward, the executant may be deemed to have acted lawfully within the scope and in exercise of his authority; see Janardan Vishun Kulkarni v. Anant Lakshmanshet (5) and Narain Chandra Mukerji v. Mohendra Nath Mukerji (6). In this view, no question of ratification arises, for there is no unauthorised act done by the mother on behalf of the infant which could be ratified.

The result is that this appeal is allowed, the decree of the Subordinate Judge set aside and that of the Court of first instance restored. We direct, however, that from the amount recovered by the plaintiff as mesne profits the sum of Rs. 60 (sixty rupees) which was paid by the respondent as premium for the lease should be deducted. The appellant is entitled to his costs both in this Court and the Court of Appeal below.

Mortgage — Mortgagee in possession — Government revenue and cesses, liability to pay—Redemption—Accounts—Oudh Local Rates Act (IV of 1878), s. 5—Mortgagee in possession, whether landlord.

In British India, a mortgagee in possession of immoveable property under a mortgage made before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, was, under the ordinary law then in force, bound to manage it as a person with ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own, and, unless there was an agreement to the contrary with the mortgagor, he was bound to pay out of the income of the property, the Government land revenue which might during his possession be assessed upon it, and such charges of a public nature as might accrue due in respect of the property and be payable by the person in possession of the rents and profits, and was not entitled to charge such payments against his mortgagor in the accounts. [p. 1021, col. 1.]

A mortgagee in possession of the mortgaged property is the "landholder" within the meaning of section 5 of the Oudh Local Rates Act. [p. 1020, col. 2.]

Appeal from a decree of the Court of Judicial Commissioner, Oudh, dated the 17th July 1919, varying a decree of the Subordinate Judge, Bara Banki, dated the 30th September 1916.

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal by the representative of the defendant from a decree dated the 17th July 1919, of the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh, which varied a decree, dated the 30th September 1916, of the Subordinate Judge of Barabanki.

The suit in which this appeal has arisen is for the redemption of a mortgage with possession of the 15th May 1869, of the village of Pindra, and of a mortgage of the same village by conditional sale of the 24th June 1874. The original mortgagor and the original mortgagee died before suit. The suit was brought on the 21st August 1915, by the representative of the mortgagor against the representative of the mortgagee. The plaintiff and the defendant are now dead and each is represented in this appeal, but for the sake of convenience, they will be referred to respectively in this judgment as the plaintiff and the defendant as if living.

After the granting of the mortgages the mortgagee purchased a 4 annas share in the village, and it is admitted that the plaintiff is entitled to redeem the mortgages on payment of twelve-sixteenths of the amount which would otherwise be due under the mortgages. The questions now in dispute, which have to be considered in this appeal, are whether the defendant is to be allowed in the account of the money due to obtain redemption payments of enhanced land revenue and payments of certain cesses which were made by the mortgagee after the 15th May 1869.

It is not disputed that under the mortgage of 1869 the mortgagee in possession had to pay out of the usufruct, the Government land revenue payable under the Settlement in force in 1869 but it is contended by the defendant that he is entitled to charge in the accounts as against the mortgagor any enhancements of that land revenue which the mortgagee was obliged to pay.

In the mortgage of 1869 it was stated that the mortgagor had mortgaged the village to the mortgagee for a period of one year and had put the mortgagee in possession, and the mortgagor agreed amongst other things, that if he failed to redeem within one year he should not be entitled to redeem for twenty-five years; that he would cause mutation of names to be effected in favour of the mortgagee in the Government records, "and when revenue is paid the dakhilas (receipt) shall be issued to the mortgagee;" that until redemption the profits of the village, with all zemindari dues, should be appropriated by the mortgagee; "that power to enhance rent, to appoint and dismiss Patwaris, Maqaddams and Chaukidars, and to resume Muafi land from the Muafidars who hold land as service grants, to populate Purwas and settle the tenants, to determine rights, etc., which had hitherto been exercised by the mortgagor, shall in the same manner be exercised by the mortgagee;" and that after redemption the mortgagor should not be entitled to claim any mesne profits.

The mortgagor borrowed further moneys from the mortgagee, and on the 24th June 1878, gave to the mortgagee a mortgage in the form of a deed of conditional sale, the second clause of which as translated is as follows:—

"2. That just as the mortgaged property is liable for the money due under the mortgage-deed, dated the 15th of May 1869, similarly the same property is and shall be liable for the money due under this deed, that if I, the executant, pay in one lump sum within five years from today, in a fallow season in the month of Jeth, the money due under this deed and the mortgage-money of the mortgage-deed as well as other amounts due, the mortgaged property shall be redeemed, otherwise the consideration of this deed and the mortgage money of the deed of mortgage shall be deemed to be the consideration money and this deed shall be deemed to be the sale-deed, and on the expiry of the stipulated period, I, the declarant, shall have left in me no right of redemption nor any other rights in respect of the mortgaged property and the said Mirza Sahib shall be entitled to have it foreclosed at any time he pleases, after the expiry of the stipulated period and to that I shall have no objection or claim whatever."

It appears to their Lordships that the mortgage-deed of the 15th May 1869, and the mortgage-deed of the 24th June 1878, must be read together, and that the parties intended that the mortgagee should be treated as having held the mortgaged property from the 15th May 1869, as a mortgagee in possession under a mortgage in the form of a mortgage by conditional sale.

At the time when the mortgage of the 15th May 1869, was made the land revenue payable to the Government in respect of the village was Rs. 1,300 per annum, but in the settlement of 1896 it was increased to Rs. 1,600 per annum, to be further increased in five years to Rs. 1,900. The increased revenue was paid by the mortgagee.

The cesses, the payments of which the defendant claims to charge against the plaintiff in the account were sums paid by the mortgagee in discharge of a local rate imposed on the village under Act IV of 1878, the Oudh Local Rates Act, 1878. By section 5 of that Act, "All sums due on account of any rate imposed under this Act, shall be recoverable as if they were arrears of land revenue due in respect of the land on account of which the rate is payable. Under that Act the "Landholder" was responsible for the payment of rates imposed upon the land, and by section 3 of the Act "Landholder" included the person in receipt of the rent of any land, and responsible for the payment of the land revenue, if any, assessed on the estate. The mortgagee was the "Landholder" within the meaning of the Act.

This suit to redeem the two mortgages already mentioned was tried by the Subordinate Judge of Barabanki, who disallowed the defendant's claims in respect of the payment of enhanced revenue, but allowing his claim to include as against the plaintiff in the account the payments of the cesses, made a decree for redemption on payment of the amounts mentioned in the decree, and in default of such payment decreed that the 12 annas share in the village should be sold. From that decree the plaintiff and the defendant respectively appealed to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner.

After the hearing of the appeal to the Court of the Judicial Commissioner had commenced the advocate for the defendant asked the Court to receive in evidence a document dated the 6th July 1871, which had been executed by the mortgagor in favour of the mortgagee and had not been previously produced in the suit. It related to the mortgage of the 15th May 1869. The learned Judges admitted the document in evidence, apparently on the ground that a provision in the document was incompatible with the mortgagee having a right to add the payments of the enhanced land revenue to the mortgage money. How that document could have assisted the defendant's case their Lordships do not see, nor did the learned Judges who admitted it in evidence. Independently of the document of the 6th July 1871, the Judicial Commissioners held, to state their findings briefly, that the mortgagee as mortgagee in possession was bound to pay the enhanced revenue and the cesses out of the usufruct, and that the defendant was not entitled to charge such payments against the plaintiff in the account, and dismissed the defendant's appeal to their Court and substituted for the decree for sale of the Subordinate Judge a decree for foreclosure if the amount which they found to be due was not paid on or before the 17th January 1920. This appeal is from that decree.

The art of conveyancing was in 1869 and in 1878 little, if at all, understood in India, except possibly by some English Solicitors, practising in the Presidency towns, and the mortgages in question were made before the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 came into force and afforded some information as to how mortgages of immoveable property should be framed. Their Lordships have no doubt that the mortgagor and mortgagee intended that the mortgage of 1869 and the mortgage of 1878 should be read together, and that until they should be redeemed the mortgagee should be in possession of the mortgaged property in the position of a mortgagee by a conditional sale in possession, and that if the mortgages should not be redeemed the right to redeem should be determined by a decree of foreclosure.

In British India a mortgagee in possession of immoveable property under a mortgage made before the Transfer of Property Act of 1882 came into force was under the ordinary law then in force bound to manage it as a person with ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own, and, unless there was an agreement to the contrary with the mortgagor he was bound to pay out of the income of the property the Government land revenue which might during his possession be assessed upon it and such charges of a public nature as might accrue due in respect of the property and be payable by the person in possession of the rents and profits, and was not entitled to charge such payments against his mortgagor in the accounts.

Their Lordships will humbly advise, His Majesty that the time for payment of the Rs. 32, 268-2-0 redemption money into Court allowed by the Court of the Judicial Commissioners of Oudh should be extended to six calendar months after the receipt by that Court of His Majesty's Order in Council and that in other respects this appeal should be dismissed. The appellant must pay the costs of this appeal.

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (IX) Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O XXXIV, r. 9—Redemption suit—Surplus profits, claim to recover—Court-Fee payable.

Under section 7 (IX) of the Court Fees Act the amount of Court-Fee payable in respect of a suit for redemption is to be calculated on the principal sum secured by the mortgage. [p. 1022, col. 2.]

Where in a suit for redemption the mortgagor claims a certain sum as surplus mesne profits, he is not bound to pay Court-Fee upon the surplus amount claimed in addition to the Court-Fee payable on the principal amount secured by the mortgage. [p. 1022, col. 2.]

Appeal from the judgment of the Subordinate Judge, Budaun, dated the 6th May 1921.

JUDGMENT.—An office report has been put up before us, in which it is stated that the amount of Court-fee paid on the plaint was insufficient and that a further sum of

CHIDDU SINGH v. JHANJHAN RAI

Rs. 385 was payable on the plaint. Dr. Agarwala disputes the correctness of the office report and we have therefore to decide whether the amount of Court-fee payable on the plaint was or was not sufficient. The suit was one for redemption of a mortgage made in 1863. The principal amount secured by the mortgage was Rs. 960. It provided that the mortgagee was to remain in possession, appropriate the usufruct, deduct out of it the amount of interest payable on the mortgage which was at the rate of fifteen annas per cent. per mensem, and appropriate the balance towards the principal. The mortgagors remained in possession of a part of the property upon an undertaking to pay a rent for that part. In the present suit the plaintiffs sought to redeem the mortgage on the allegation that the full amount of the mortgage including interest had been discharged by the usufruct and that a surplus of Rs. 7,533-12 9 was due to the plaintiffs by the mortgagee. The plaintiffs accordingly claimed redemption and also asked that the defendant mortgagee be directed to pay to the plaintiff the aforesaid amount. Court-fee was paid upon Rs. 960, the principal amount of the mortgage in accordance with the provisions of section 7, Cl. (9) of the Court Fees Act. A dispute was raised in the Court of first instance as to the adequacy of the amount of the Court fee, but that Court held that the amount paid was sufficient. The plaintiffs obtained a decree from the Court of first instance for redemption subject to the payment of a certain amount to the mortgagee which that Court found to be due to the latter. The plaintiffs appealed in respect of that amount to the lower Appellate Court and that Court varied the amount. From this decree of the lower Appellate Court the present appeal has been prepared. The appeal raises a question as to jurisdiction and apparently as to the amount due. But the Office reports that Court-fee ought to have been paid on the Rs. 7,533-12-9 in addition to the Court-fee paid in respect of the principal amount of the mortgage.

In our opinion the report is not correct. The suit is one for redemption as contemplated by O. XXXIV of the Code of Civil Procedure. Under r. 9 of that order upon a decree for redemption being made the Court may order an account to be taken and if in the result any sum be found due by the mortgagor the Court should order the mortgagor to pay that amount within a time fixed by the Court. Similarly if any amount be found due to the mortgagor as surplus mesne profits the Court should direct the mortgagee to pay the said amount to the mortgagor. The suit however in every respect was a suit for redemption. Under section 7 Cl. (9) of the Court Fees Act the amount of Court-fee payable in respect of a suit for redemption is to be calculated on the principal sum secured by the mortgage. Therefore, in accordance with the terms of the Court-Fees Act the Court-fee payable would be regulated by the principal amount secured by the mortgage. This was the view taken by this Court in the case of Husain Khanam v. Husain Khan (1). A similar view was taken in the case of Gopikishen v. Sorabjee (2). Our attention has not been drawn to any ruling in which a contrary view has been taken. It is true that in a certain number of cases it has been held that if a dispute arises in appeal, as to the amount payable by or to the plaintiff the appeal should be valued with respect to the amount claimed by the appellant and ad valorem Court-fee ought to be paid on that amount, that is not the question put before us. The only question we have to decide is whether when a suit is brought for redemption and a certain amount is claimed as surplus mesne profits the plaintiff is bound to pay Court-fee upon the surplus amount claimed in addition to the Court-fee on the principal amount secured by the mortgage. This question was decided in the cases to which we have referred and in these cases it was held that the suit being a suit for redemption Court-fee was payable upon the principal amount secured by the mortgage. We agree with the view taken in these rulings which have as far as we are aware, not been dissented from by this Court or any other Court. In any case we feel ourselves bound to follow it and hold that the amount of Court-fee payable upon the plaint was rightly paid with reference to the principal amount secured by the mortgage.

Alluvial increments are subject to assessment, but the proceedings of the assessing authorities are subject to being quashed in the ordinary Courts of law if they have been tainted by any fundamental irregularity, such as a defiance or non-compliance with the essentials of the procedure. [p. 1026, col. 2.]

The burden of establishing such essential and fundamental violation of statutory requirements rests upon the person alleging it. [p. 1026, col. 2.]

It is not sufficient to submit in a Court of law that, upon the documents before the Board of Revenue, doubts arise as to whether this, that, or the other detail of investigation should have been set to rest more clearly in the course of the administrative procedure. If such doubts arise upon points of fact, the Board of Revenue is competent to deal with them and is, further, the proper Court before which they should be stated. In order that the doubts should be promptly set at rest, it may have to be on the ground itself. Such is the proper function of an administrative body. [p. 1026, col. 2 & p. 1027, col. 1.]

JUDGMENT.—This is an appeal from a decree dated the 15th March 1920, of the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal, which affirmed a decree dated the 27th July 1918, of the Additional Subordinate Judge of Backergunj.

The plaintiffs are Roy Jatindra Nath Chowdhury and Roy Harendra Nath Chowdhury.

They instituted this suit on the 30th January 1917, after due notice against the Secretary of State for India in Council, contesting the legality of the assessment imposed in the course of an alleged Diara Survey on lands in the villages of Amragach Hagalpati and Nizamia Gopekhali in the district of Backergunj.

These villages are part of an estate called Debnathpur bearing towzi No. 4903 of the Backergunj Collectorate owned and possessed by the plaintiffs. The plaintiffs' title to this estate is undisputed, and its earlier history is set forth in a Rubokari of the Sunderbans Commissioner of the 15th July 1872.

On the 1st September 1839, a grant was made by the Government to Debnath Roy, benamidar for the plaintiff's predecessors in title, of a tract of the jungle and forest land then known as Thshkhali, but later as Debnathpur. The grant was an ijara lease for 20 years, and was rent free.

Debnath Roy, taking advantage of rules recently framed by the Government, obtained a grant on the 17th November 1856, of the portion of waste land in the Sunderbans estimated to contain 34,000 bighas, described as Lot or Abad Debnathpur, shown in Captain Hodge's map and bounded on the south and west by the Sapleza and Baleswar rivers respectively. The transaction was evidenced by a pottah and a kabuliyat (Exhibit 3). The grant was at a progressive rent for a term of 99 years, to take effect from the 1st September 1839, and power reserved to the Government to make a survey and measurement at any time between the twentieth and thirtieth years from that date to ascertain the area of the land granted and to calculate the stipulated revenue. In the course of a survey of the leased lands directed by the Commissioner of the Sunderbans in 1858, a map was prepared in or about 1863, and it was determined that the grant included an area of only 14,505 bighas 5 cottahs. This led to a litigation (after-mentioned), as the result of which a doul, of 9th April 1870 (Exhibit H), was executed in favour of the plaintiff's predecessors in-title of 33,441 bighas 17 cottahs 7 chittacks of land known as Debnathpur for the remaining 68 years of the 99 years' lease. In 1870 Mr. Ellison, in the course of a survey, prepared a map (Ex. J) in which the plaintiffs' mahal is depicted. The plaintiffs have been paying revenue in accordance with the arrangement and their mahal has been numbered towzi No. 4908.

On the 2nd October 1900, the Government issued five separate notifications By No. 1959 T. R, the Lieutenant-Governor, in exercise of the powers conferred upon him by section 101 (1) of the Bengal Tenancy Act as amended and with the previous sanction of the Governor-General in Council, directed that a survey should be made and a Record of Rights prepared in respect of all lands included within the external boundaries of Thanas, Banphal, Nalchiti, Barisal, and Backergunj in the district of Backergunj, with certain exceptions therein specified. By Notification No. 1960 T. R., under the powers vested in him by section 3 of the Bengal Survey Act V of 1875, the Lieutenant-Governor ordered that a survey be made of the lands in Thanas, Barisal, Backergunj, Banphal and Nalchiti, and that the boundaries of estates, tenures, mouzas and fields be demarcated in lands to be surveyed. By notification No 1961 T.R, under section 4 of the same Act, Mr. Beatson-Ball was appointed to be the Superintendent of Survey for the purpose of carrying out the survey and demarcation of boundaries ordered in Notification No. 1960 T. R. By Notification No. 1962 T. R., under the same section, Babu Peari Mohan Basu was appointed to be an Assistant Superintendent of Survey for the same purpose. And by Notification No. 1967 T. R, under the powers conferred upon him by section 3 of Act IX of 1847, the Lieutenant-Governor ordered that a new survey be made of the lands falling within the district of Backergunj which were situate on the banks of rivers and on the shores of the sea, and that new maps be prepared according to such survey. By two later notifications of the 27th October 1902, and the 14th November 1903, Mr. Bedford was appointed Extra Assistant Superintendent and Mr. Beatson-Ball was again appointed Superintendent.

As already stated in 1900 the Government decided to make a Revenue survey of the Backergunj district in accordance with the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885). Whilst the Revenue survey was proceeding—itself a work of great labour, minuteness and complexity—it was considered desirable to make a survey also of the alluvial accretions that had taken place to the north and east of the two rivers—Sapleza and Baleswar, by the recessions of the rivers between the years 1872 and 1900. The entire proceeding is set out in considerable detail in the final report of the Diara Commissioner (p. 30 of Pt. III). This is an important document which requires full consideration to judge whether the Revenue authorities acted in accordance with the law or not in carrying out the Diara measurements:—

"It was originally intended" says the report "that the Diara survey should be carried out concurrently with the preparation of the Record-of-Rights in the district and by Notification No. 1967 T. R., dated the 2nd October 1900, published in the Calcutta Gazette of the 10th October 1900, a new survey was ordered of the lands situated on the banks of the rivers and on the shores of the sea within the district Backergunj according to the provisions of section 3 of Act IX of 1847. During the preparation of the Record-of-Rights, it was, however, found that the Settlement Officer's hands were too full to take up this additional work, which the Diara survey of 1879-1881, confined only to the Ganges and the Meghna rivers, had shown to be of considerable complexity, and it was then decided to postpone the Diara operations until after the final publication of the Record-of-Rights. The final publication was complete of the permanently settled portion of the district early in 1908 and the Collector in his letter No. 216 K. M., dated the 11th May 1908, to the Commissioner of the Dacca Division proposed the initiation of Diara proceeding in the district."

It appears to have taken eight years for the completion of the Revenue Survey. Then the Diara Survey was taken in hand. On its completion certain notices were issued by the Diara Deputy Collector to the plaintiffs. That of 4th July 1914, will be hereafter cited.

It has to be borne in mind upon the one and only substantial question, namely, whether alluvion had taken place, that no doubt was or is thrown upon that as a matter of fact.

Nor, further, was any doubt suggested upon the proposition that emergent lands should certainly and naturally and under the statutes be lands from which Government revenue should be derived. The objections made on a variety of points, and with much minuteness, were that the correct procedure to enable such revenue to be imposed was defective, and that, consequently, up to date, the lands stood free from taxation.

On 4th July 1914, the following notice was sent to the plaintiffs by the Diara Deputy Collector :—

"Whereas by virtue of Government Notification No. 1967 T. R., dated the 2nd October 1900, issued under section 3 of Act IX of 1847, a new map has been prepared for the lands of mouzah Amragachia Hogalpati, No. 3500, on the bank of the Sanleza River in thana Matbaria and the said map has been compared with the Revenue survey map and it appears from such comparison that the undermentioned area has accreted to mahal Debnathpur, No. 4908, in the said mouzah."

Then it is added :—

"Be it further known that if there be any objection to this procedure the same should be filed within fifteen days from the date of receipt of this notice."

No objection appears to have been filed. The Diara Collector accordingly made his order for the assessment of the accreted lands on the 22nd October 1914. The objectors (the plaintiffs) applied for time (apparently for further representation) which was allowed three times. But they appear to have done nothing, and the order for assessment was finally enforced on the 2nd February 1915. The plaintiffs thereupon executed a kabuliyat simply stating that they would bring a suit in the Civil Court in respect of the said Diara lands and that they executed the kabuliyat under protest.

By a further notice of the 11th February 1915, it was stated that it had been found, on comparison with the Settlement map of 1870 that smaller areas had formed as Diara accretions. This correction was based upon the fact that it had been discovered that certain diluvion had taken place, reducing the extent of the emergent or alluviated lands. It was accordingly just and proper that the assessment should proceed upon the extent thus corrected. The parties were thus joining issue upon the fact (1) of alluvion and its extent, and (2) whether, notwithstanding alluvion, the emergent lands were assessable in law or were already assessed as within the existing mahals.

Objections were filed by the plaintiffs, but they were disallowed successively by the Deputy Collector, the Collector, and the Board of Revenue.

Revenue was accordingly assessed on the lands alleged to have accreted, and the plaintiffs executed under protest kabuliyats by which they undertook to pay this revenue.

The plaintiffs then instituted this suit in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Backergunj, contesting the propriety and legality of this assessment. They allege in their plaint that "no new survey was made of any land on the banks of the rivers Sapleza and Baleswar in accordance with Government Notification No. 1967 T. R., dated 2nd October 1900, issued under Act IX of 1847, and that no map was prepared under the said Act." Therefore, they contended, all the operations in connection with the Diara proceedings were ultra vires and void.

The defendant's answer to this in his written statement was that new maps of mouzas Amragachia and Nizama on the banks of the two rivers "were prepared in the course of the District Settlement operation," and that from comparison and relay of these maps and the Revenue Survey maps, as well as the Settlement map of 1870, it appeared that land had been added to towzi No. 4908, Abad Debnathpur. Other pleas were advanced to which it is not necessary to refer at this stage. The fourth issue framed is in these terms:—

"Is the Diara proceedings valid and legal, and is it liable to be set aside?"

On the 27th July 1918, the Additional Subordinate Judge of Backergunj pronounced judgment in the plaintiffs' favour and declared that all operations in connection with the Diara proceedings in respect of the lands in suit were ultra vires and void. The Court's decree was in accordance with the judgment.

An appeal from this decree was preferred by the defendant, but it was dismissed by the High Court on the 15th March 1920. From this decree of dismissal the present appeal has been preferred.

Numerous points have been raised in the course of the litigation, but with one exception they do not call for more than passing notice.

The plea of limitation has not been pressed, for the defendant seeks a decision on the merits and, in particular, on the legality of the assessment.

The plaintiff's contention that rule 745 of the Bengal Settlement Manual was expressly incorporated in their lease cannot be sustained nor is there any force in their argument that this rule was otherwise a bar to assessment proceedings even if legally initiated.

Equally ineffective is the contention that a survey after the thirtieth year from its commencement was in contravention of the terms of the lease; the survey proposed was of land not comprised in the lease. For this reason, too, the provision in the lease defining the rate of revenue has no application.

The High Court's view expressed in the forefront of their judgment that mahal Debnathpur is not, as Act IX of 1847 requires, "an estate paying revenue directly to Government" is obviously erroneous, as is its ground of decision on the position of the lands in dispute and the character of the rivers Baleswar and Sapleza.

With the exception of the one point about to be noted, their Lordships have now discussed all the objections that were dealt with in the course of a minute and protracted argument, and they are of opinion that these objections fail. As already mentioned it is not denied that considerable accretion of land by alluvion did in fact occur. Nor is it denied that the legislation upon this subject, including Act IX of 1847, will fail in its main object unless such lands be subjected to assessment.

Their Lordships desire to make it clear, however, that the proceedings of the assessing authorities may be still subject to being quashed in the oridinary Courts of law if they have been tainted by fundamental irregularity. Their Lordships say so in view of the provisions of section 6 of the Act of 1847. That section is in the following terms:—

"Whenever on inspection of any such new map it shall appear to the local Revenue authorities that land has been added to any estate paying revenue directly to Government, they shall without delay assess the same with a revenue payable to Government according to the rules in force for assessing alluvial increments, and shall report their proceedings forthwith to the Board of Revenue, whose orders thereupon shall be final."

It appears to their Lordships that it is a convenient and proper procedure that in an eminently practical matter, affecting measurements, surveys and maps of localities, with which the assessing officials on the one hand and owners on the other have presumably intimate local knowledge, such objection should be tabled to, and considered and reported upon by the Board of Revenue. The words of this statute imposing finality upon the orders of the Board of Revenue in such a situation appear to their Lordships not only to be imperative but most salutary.

Two conditions, however, must be noted; the first is, that mentioned, viz., that fundamental irregularity, that is to say, a defiance of or non-compliance with the essentials of the procedure would still give ground for questioning the proceedings in a Court of law. The second proposition is that the burden of establishing such essential and fundamental violation of statutory requirements rests upon the person alleging it. Unless this last rule be adhered to it is manifest that the way will be opened to endless objections to procedure, even though these are substantially on questions of fact, and the object of the statute, namely, the assessment of lands, will thereby fail.

To these two conditions a third, by way of supplement, may be added, namely, that it is not sufficient to submit in a Court of law that, upon the documents before the Board of Revenue, doubts arise as to whether this, that or the other detail of investigation should have been set to rest more clearly in the course of the administrative procedure. If such doubts arise upon points of fact, the Board of Revenue is competent to deal with them and is, further, the proper Court before which they should be stated. In order that the doubts should be promptly set at rest, it may have to be on the ground itself. Such is the proper function of an administrative body.

All other objections having been dealt with, the one which remains is set out in Article 7 of the plaint in the following terms :—

" That actually no new survey was made of any land on the banks of the rivers Baleswar or Sapleza in accordance with Government notification No. 1967 T. R., dated 2nd October, 1900, issued under Act IX of 1847, and that no map was prepared under the said Act."

This objection is in two parts, first that there was no new survey, and, second, that there was no map. On these subjects the two witnesses are the Diara Deputy Collector, Hara Kishore Biswas himself and Peari Mohan Hazra, the surveyor who was in service in the Diara office under the Deputy Collector. The result of the evidence is to leave no doubt upon these two points, namely, that there were previous maps to go by, and that the alluviated land was visited and surveyed in fact. The testimony of these witnesses makes that clear beyond question. The survey of 1862–3 and the maps of that date were used. Further information was obtained from the map prepared by Mr. Ellison in the year 1870, an important year in the history of this piece of ground. For a controversy had arisen which resulted in litigation under decree of the High Court dated 11th March 1868, establishing Debnath Roy's right to hold 33,441 bighas. A map called the Ellison map was made at the time, and, following these proceedings, on the 9th April 1870, the respondents' ancestors executed to the Government a doul kabuliyat, stating in detail the revenue to be paid. With these materials, namely the maps of 1862—3 and the map of 1870, the Deputy Collector in charge of the Diara operations and his surveyor proceeded to work. He reduced the district settlement map to a 4 inch scale map, then he superimposed it upon the revenue survey map, he himself prepared a comparative map, then he made comparisons locally " to test if the line was accurately drawn, and to find out where in the locality the line stood ". He then adds details such as these : —

" The chowkidar, panchayet and many other tenants were present. In comparing the map in the locality and finding out how much land of each individual tenant fell within the Diara area, I at first enlarged the map of 1870 to 16-inch scale and, superimposing the cadastral survey map over it, drew out the line and, locating it by measurement, found out the positions and drove pegs. . . I first of all tested the accuracy of the District Settlement map and found it correct. I was not entrusted to enquire how much land was diluviated —still, I made measurement and showed the line of diluvion in the District Settlement map and comparative map."

Various maps appear in a book on this appeal. One of these is No. 6, which was exhibit N in the Court below, which contains the line drawn to show the lines, not only of alluviation, but of the subsequent diluviation already referred to, and the witness explains that "the lines in yellow in Exhibits N, N (1), etc., are in my hand. I put them on that occasion in the locality. I showed the Diara as also the diluvion lines on the map."

As already explained, not only had this land been previously surveyed and maps made as mentioned, but much care seems to have been taken, not only to mark the alluvion in 1904-5, but in 1914 to give the benefit to the taxpayer by a re-survey and re-drawing so as to exclude from assessibility land subsequently diluviated.

After a careful and anxious examination of all the facts submitted, their Lordships are quite unable to affirm that a Diara survey was not made. It is true that one map was superimposed upon another, surely a very natural thing to do when land was supposed to have between two dates undergone accretion ; but the land itself was visited and surveyed.

What remains appears to be that—granted superimposition of plans—a separate map was not made of the alluviated land per se. That is to say, the results of the comparative map formed by inscribing the results of superimposition marked upon the maps used in that process, and when marked thus formed a comparative map, were not put upon a separate piece of paper which contained the outline of the alluviated land.

Their Lordships are clearly of opinion that all this was in the practical region eminently cognizable by the officials acting in the revenue proceedings and eminently fit for settlement and decision by the Board of Revenue. So much so is this the case that it would appear to be pretty clear that, had this objection been made then and there, the Board of Revenue would at once have ordered the separate sheet to be prepared, which was desiderated.

Passages occur in the judgment of the Court below which seem to taint with illegality or impropriety the operation of superimposition of maps. There is nothing wrong with this from the legal point of view, and from the practical point of view the Revenue Court can deal with it. In Rajcoomar Roy v. Gobind Chunder Roy (1) this Board said:—

"In boundary cases of this kind nothing is easier than to propound riddles which cannot be answered by merely looking at the maps or reading the statement which appears in the Record. If it were enough to show to this tribunal difficulties which the respondent's counsel cannot explain, and then to contend that his case is not proved, he would labour under an unfair amount of burden. In such cases the local Courts have advantages over the remote ones."

In their Lordships' view the language aptly applies to Board of Revenue Court proceedings and more particularly so in view of the finality of that Board's orders under section 6 of the Act of 1847. In the same case the following pronouncement was made:—

"They can show many difficulties of a kind which probably no amount of mapping or verbal description would avoid. Mr. Madge's map does not, so far as their Lordships can see, show in terms, and on its face, the Thackbust line which was complained of and corrected in the mutnaza suit, nor the lands described in the plaint. But those objections were before the High Court, who were satisfied that Mr. Madge had shown the things required; and though it does not appear that Mr. Madge was present to explain his map, the Court could certainly have required his presence if any real difficulties had been felt on those points."

Again, their Lordships think it right to say that this language aptly applies to the Board of Revenue proceedings, and they further desire to add that, while the survey proceedings and the map proceedings had been the subject of the examination of the two officers practically and personally connected with this work, the respondents, who have resisted throughout having assessment made on these lands, did not appear as witnesses on the subject, although, in the evidence already given, it had been clearly shown that the survey had properly been made in the presence of many persons named.

It would rather appear as if the whole of this point was a mere incident in a case which was essentially founded on a mistake. The respondents resisted the assessment of this increment of the estate upon grounds which this Board has recently found to be unsound in law. They maintained, in short, that the mahal included the increment because its boundaries extended in the case of each of the rivers mentioned, namely, the Baleswar and Sapleza, ad medium filum. The High Court, in their judgment, erroneously treated this as a sound ground. Their judgment was pronounced upon the 15th March 1920.

But the law applicable to this subject is to an opposite effect, as has been settled in the case of Secretary of State for India v. Maharajah of Bardwan (2). That case was a fortiori of the present, and it was held that the Government is entitled to Public Revenue under Act IX of 1847, from chars formed in a non-navigable river, even where it flows through a permanently settled Zamindary, as well as up to the middle line of the river where that is the boundary of the Zamindary, and this even where it appears that the river bed was part of the permanently settled Zamindary. Against this judgment of the Board, delivered by Lord Cave, no argument could, of course, be raised at their Lordships' Bar.

That was the matter of substance, and fundamental, because if the respondents' mahal included the alluvion as already assessed land,

(1) 19 C. 660; 19 I. A. 140; 6 Sar. P. C. J. 140; 9 Ind. Dec. (N. S.) 688 (P.C.).

(2) 67 Ind. Cas. 835; (1922) A. I. R. (P. C.) 6; 49; C. 103; 48 I. A. 565; 42 M. L. J. 61; 35 C. L. J. 92 26 C. W. N. 619 (P.C.).

the fresh assessment thereof was necessarily illegal. That fundamental objection having been got rid of, however, the respondents were, of course, within their rights in raising the other points now dealt with, including that just descirbed as incidental. Upon that incidental point, however, whether there was or was not a new survey map prepared in such a way as to satisfy the requirements of the Act of 1847—it must be repeated that it lies upon the respondents challenging the assessment proceedings to prove the fundamental illegatity of which they complain.

As the result of a long and searching argument, the most that can be said is that the point may have been left not entirely cleared up. On principle, and on authority, this is entirely insufficient. The appellants have merely propounded a riddle. The case of Kumar Basanta Roy v. Secretary of State for India (3) has been cited by the Additional Subordinate Judge as an authority condemning the practice of finding an excess area by superimposition of maps. Their Lordships do not read the judgment in any such sense, but the passage of Lord Sumner's pronouncement, which is apparently referred to has, in the view of the Board, a direct bearing of another kind upon the present proceedings. It is to the following effect :—

The respondents' argument rested on three points : First that since 1886 they had been, as they said, in possession of certain portions of a char known as char Raninuggur No. 1, that by superimposing the ameen's 1886 map on his survey of 1906 it would be seen that part of the area disputed in this action, although claimed as part of char Raninuggur No. 2, really fell within char Raninuggur No. 1, and that there had been a confusion of mauza Jirat, which lay in the north of the disputed area, with an area called char Jirat, which lay outside of it and to the south, some miles away. Their Lordships' Board has had occasion before now [Rajcoomar Roy's Case] (1) to deprecate the practice of propounding riddles of this kind, and to point out how rarely they succeed. It may be doubted if such efforts are worth the labour they involve. After the best consideration that they could give, their Lordships are clear on one point only, namely, that this case was not made at all at the trial, and is not made out now."

The Board is of opinion that these observations fitly apply also to proceedings in the Board of Revenue, a Board specially charged with the settlement of disputes as to boundaries and changes therein and other matters of fact and procedure which are capable of being most satisfactorily treated with all the advantages of local and special and accumulated experience. It has been noted accordingly that objections were taken and discussed before the Collector of Backerganj, and, after his disposal thereof, two petitions of appeal were presented by the respondents to the Board of Revenue on the 31st March 1915 and 19th November 1915, the latter being confined to the Sapleza river. Every conceivable point seems to have been taken, but, in the course of the 12 paragraphs of statement, and the five reasons for appeal, this point as to the alleged absence of a proper map is not taken. For the reason about to be given, their Lordships express little surprise at this. For the Record of the proceedings of the Board of Revenue appear to disclose, not only that such an objection is ill-founded on fact, but must have been known to be so by the plaintiffs' local representatives appearing for the purpose before the Revenue Board.

On the 22nd October 1914, a long entry appears in the order sheet of the objection existing in the Diara Settlement office, and point (b) thereof is in the following terms : —

" By virtue of Government Notification No. 1967 T. R., dated the 2nd October 1900, a survey of the lands which are situated on the banks of the rivers within the district of Backerganj was made in the course of the District Settlement operations. An index map showing the surplus accretions was prepared by the Diara Officer. The portion diluviated since the District Settlement has also been shown in the comparative map after local enquiry."

The argument did not go so far as to suggest that this record is in any way impeachable. In these circumstances the map point may be said not to be left in doubt, but to disappear.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the decree of the High Court should be set aside and the suit dismissed with costs here and below.

AMIR MANDAL—APPELLANT

MOHAN CHANDRA MANDAL—RESPONDENT

Limitation Act (IX of 1908), s. 5—Court-fees not paid on appeal—Order for payment within fixed time or appeal to stand dismissed—Delay in obtaining stamp—Extension of time.

In the case of an appeal filed without proper court-fees, the Court passed an order that the appellant should deposit the required court-fee within a fixed period, otherwise the appeal would stand dismissed. The period allowed expired during Court vacation and on the reopening day the appellant tendered the requisite amount for the stamp to the stamp vendor. The stamp vendor had no stamp of the required value but promised to supply one before the Court closed for the day. The stamp, however, was not supplied on that day but on the next day when it was tendered in Court:—

Held, that there had been no negligence or laches on the part of the appellant and sufficient cause had been shown for the extension of time and for reinstatement of the appeal. [p. 1030, col. 2.]

Messrs. Tribhuan Nath Sahay and Anand Prasad, for the Appellant.

Messrs. Purnendu Narayan Sinha and Nitai Chandra Ghose, for the Respondent.

ORDER.—In this case an order was made on the 28th November to deposit the Court-fee within a month and the order provided that if the fee was not paid within a month the appeal would stand dismissed. The time expired during the Christmas vacation and on the first day of term, viz., the 3rd January, the appellants applied to the stamp vendor and tendered the money for a stamp of Rs. 90 which was the stamp necessary to be filed. That was at about 10-30 in the morning. The stamp vendor had no Court-fee stamp of that value but promised to supply one by 3-30 P. M. on the same day. The money was thereupon deposited with the stamp vendor on his assurance that the stamp would be supplied by 3-30 P. M. When the clerk went again at 3-30 P. M. to obtain the stamp he found that the stamp vendor was not there and that he had not returned from the Treasury. The learned Vakil for the appellant waited for the stamp vendor in the High Court until 4-30 P. M. but as he did not turn up he was unable to get the stamp in time but he did obtain it on the following day and it was then tendered. The question now arises whether in face of the order made on the 28th November we can accept the stamp as that order stated that the appeal would stand dismissed if the stamp was not filed within a month. It is quite clear from what I have stated that there was no negligence or laches on the part of the appellants and so far as they are concerned they did their best to comply with the order. It is said that they ought to have applied for the stamp earlier but having regard to the fact that they would have had to apply sometime before the vacation, as the stamp vendor is not available during the vacation, we do not think that there was any laches on their part. It is not disputed that in the ordinary course there is no difficulty in obtaining stamps of the value of Rs. 90 as soon as they are applied for. The only question is whether in the particular circumstances of this case we can reopen the order which was made on the 28th November. We think sufficient cause has been shown even if an application were made before us for reinstating the appeal. The learned Vakil for the respondent is present and we have heard what he has to say about it and as we would have power to reinstate the appeal in spite of the order of the 28th November, we think we ought to hold that the time be extended upto the 4th January when the stamp was actually filed. The appeal will proceed in the ordinary course. The stamp has been returned to the learned Vakil for the appellant. Let it be deposited again to-day.

N. H. Order accordingly.

Buddhist Law, Burmese—Inheritance—Partition between father and children of first marriage—Second marriage — Death of father — Children of first marriage, whether entitled to share—Construction of document—Partnership of whole property—Partition.

A Burmese Buddhist before contracting a second marriage entered into an agreement with his children from his first wife whereby the whole of the existing moveable and immoveable property belonging to the father was transferred to a partnership between the father and the children, and the children were assigned definite shares in the property, a certain share being retained by the father. The latter then contracted a second marriage and died some years later;

Held, that the agreement entered into by him with his children before his second marriage was not merely a deed of partnership but amounted to a partition, and the children, therefore, were not entitled to share in any property retained by the father which he took to the second marriage. [p. 1033, col. 2.]

Where, after the death of a wife the husband partitions the property with his children and marries again, taking his share with him, on his death the children of his former marriage cannot claim from their stepmother any property which their father took to the second marriage, because they have already obtained their shares on partition. Appeal against the decree of the upper Burma Judicial Commissioner's Court, dated the 25th October 1921 reversing that of the District Judge, Mandalay, dated the 1st June 1921.

Messrs. G. Lowndes, K. C. and J. M. Parikh, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. M. Dunne, K. C. and K. Brown, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a a suit brought by the plaintiffs in the Court of the District Judge of Mandalay, Upper Burma, for a share in the inheritance of one U Nyein, a Burmese, subject to the Burmese Buddhistic law. It was treated in the first Court as a suit for administration, and a decree was made therein by the District Judge on the 1st June 1920. This decree was reversed on the 25th October 1921 by the Judicial Commissioner of Upper Burma, and the plaintiff's claim was dismissed; hence this appeal to His Majesty in Council.

The facts of the litigation are set out with clearness and precision in the able judgment of Mr. Mosley, the District Judge.

U Nyein was a trader by profession and appears to have carried on in conjunction with his wife, Ma Gale, a profitable business in rice.

They had a rice mill which, it is stated, was opened in 1894 and appears to have been at the time of Ma Gale's death in December 1904, a valuable property. It is to be noted that in the Burmanese social and legal system the wife is to all intents and purposes, a partner.

U Nyein had by Ma Gale five sons and two daughters, who were all suijuris when she died. Although under the Burmese law, the eldest daughter became entitled on Ma Gale's death to a definite share in her property, no division took place, and the father and the children continued, as in her lifetime, working in common.

Some months after Ma Gale's death, U Nyein appears to have contemplated marrying again. Before, however, the marriage was actually contracted, on the 11th May 1905, he executed the document exhibit L on the construction and meaning of which the determination of this appeal turns. About a fortnight later U Nyein married Ma Than, the contesting respondent in this appeal.

MA THAUNG v. MA THAN

Exhibit L is in form a partnership deed, but the respondent contends that in fact it is a partition deed by which U Nyein divided his property amongst his children. It is urged on her behalf that, under the law of the Dhammathats, the children have, after the partition no right in the property retained by the father. The plaintiffs deny the correctness of the legal proposition on which the respondent bases her contention, and they urge that whatever the meaning of exhibit L, they are entitled to a share in their father's inheritance.

A number of issues were framed in the Court of the District Judge ; the two following embody the substance of the matter now in dispute.

(i) Was the deed of arrangement dated the 11th May 1905 (exhibit L) between U Nyein and his children a division of inheritance in view of his approaching marriage with Ma Than, or was it a mere agreement of partnership ?

(ii) Are his children who signed that agreement entitled as heirs to share in the property retained by U Nyein under that agreement ?

The District Judge on the form of the document coupled with the evidence to which he refers in his judgment, came to the conclusion that exhibit L was not a deed of partition but merely a partnership agreement, and he accordingly, as stated already, made an administration decree with respect to the inheritance of U Nyein.

On appeal the Judicial Commissioner has taken a different view. From the circumstances proved in the case he infers that contemporaneously with exhibit L there must have been between U Nyein and his children some agreement, necessarily parole, which led him to put the division in the shape it has taken. In one place he says as follows :--

" It is open to the parties to prove that it was a condition precedent to the attaching of any obligation under the contract, that the disposition should be regarded as a partition of property in view of the marriage, and that the claims of the children of U Nyein as his heirs on his death should be modified accordingly. Further Ma Than was not a party to the document, nor can she I think for this purpose be regarded as the representative in interest of such a party. She is, therefore, entitled under the provisions of section 99 of the Evidence Act to show a contemporaneous agreement. It does not seem to me, however, that Ma Than is trying to show such a contemporaneous agreement. She does not deny that the terms of agreement between the parties were those of a partnership. Her contention is that that agreement formed a part of a larger transaction and that it was made for the purpose of effecting a division of property. I am of opinion that it is open to her to prove her contention by oral evidence. At the time that the deed was drawn up Ma Than was a stranger to the family. It is not surprising, therefore, that she is unable to bring any direct evidence as to the intention of the parties when the deed was drawn up, and as to the effect of the deed."

He is, however, definite in his conclusion that the deed in question was drawn up in view of the approaching marriage, and that by this instrument U Nyein did effect a partition of his property with his children by Ma Gale.

Owing to this divergence of opinion between the two Courts in Burma, their Lordships have carefully examined the terms of the document (exhibit L). In their opinion, it speaks for itself. It begins with the usual formula :—

On the 11th May, 1905, corresponding to the 9th Waxing of the month of Kason 1267 (Burmese Era), at Mandalay, U Nyein and his son and daughters, in order to carry on business, execute this agreement as follows:—

U Nyein will transfer all the properties, which have been in his name up to this date, to the name of the partnership.

All the house sites, buildings, rice, paddy, ponies, gharries, gold and money, which have been in existence up to this date, will belong to the partnership.

The sums of money, which Maung On Shwe, Maung San Huyin and Maung Aung Min have taken before this date, will be considered as the money belonging to the partnership.

The mill and all machines connected with it, which have been already taken possession of, belong to the partnership.

Without the consent of the majority (but not one) of the partners, the husband wife or co-heir of a partner cannot make use of the properties belonging to the partnership.

The shares, to which the partners have the right to ownership in all the partnership properties are shown below.

Either partner Ma E Yin or partner Ma Thaung will take charge of all the private properties belonging to partnership, such as jewellery, etc.

The partnership is responsible for all the debts which have been owed to, or owed by, other people up to this date.

The partnership will carry on business in accordance with the wish of the majority of the partners.

It then gives the shares as follows :—

1. U Nyein has the right of ownership to one-eighth share.

2. Maung On Shwe 3. Ma E Yin 4. Maung San Hnyin 5. Maung Aung Min 6. Ma Thaung	These 5 persons have the right of ownership to six-eighth share.
7. Maung Po Thaung 8. Maung Po Ka	These 2 persons have the right of ownership to one eighth share.

The deed was duly signed by all the executants.

The strange similarity of language between the terms of the provision contained in the second paragraph of exhibit L and the rules laid down in the Dhammathats for division of family property on the demise of one of the parents is striking. The paragraph in question provides that "all the house sites, buildings, rice, paddy, ponies, gharries, gold and money which have been in existence up to this date will belong to the partnership." In any ordinary partnership the inclusion of these articles would be regarded as unusual; but bearing in mind the rules of the Dhammathats it would be natural and in the ordinary course in a deed of partition. Again, the paragraph relating to jewellery appears to be unusual in a deed of partnership designed for carrying on business.

The provision is as follows :—

"Either partner Ma E Yin or partner Ma Thaung (two of the daughters) "will take charge of all the private properties belonging to the partnership such as jewellery, etc."

These particular provisions appear in their Lordships' opinion, to furnish the key to the solution of the question whether exhibit L is a deed of partnership or a deed of partition. U Nyein was about to contract a second marriage. Under the Burmese law whatever he possessed at the time of contracting the relationship which he contemplated, would become on the marriage the common property of his wife and himself. Nothing was more natural than that, influenced by the effect of such an eventuality on the position of his children by Ma Gale, he should, in order to provide for them during his lifetime, whilst he was absolute owner of the properties he possessed, decide upon a partition which would secure a definite share in his or her own right to each child. He accordingly, with the agreement and consent of his sons and daughters, entered into the arrangement embodied in exhibit L. None of them was entitled to any share in his lifetime. By this deed he allotted to five of his children a six-eighth share of his property and to the two younger ones one-eighth between them, retaining for himself an eighth share. The conduct of the parties to a contract reduced into writing may not vary or alter it, but their conduct may help to explain or elucidate a contract open to different meanings. The mode, therefore, in which the sons and daughters of U Nyein dealt with their shares is material; it helps to strengthen the conclusion that exhibit L was more a record of a division of rights and interest rather than a deed of partnership.

There were not only independent dealings between one or other of the children, but also between them on one side and Ma Than and U Nyein on the other. In 1907 in a suit brought by the minor son of U Nyein's third son, against U Nyein and his other children the rights of the parties came into debate. In his written statement U Nyein distinctly states that the business of rice-mill was started by him on his own account with his own capital and that "by way of providing for his children he gave them the shares in the business mentioned in the partnership deed." U Nyein's statement was confirmed by the other defendants in a joint defence filed by them. The attempt to make out they had made that admission under the instigation of U Nyein signally failed in the first Court.

After her marriage with U Nyein Ma Than appears from the evidence to have assisted him in his business and although there was no definite separation between U Nyein and his children by Ma Gale, the new menage was carried on quite independently and separately from them.

On the whole, their Lordships have come to the conclusion that exhibit L evidences a partition of the rice-mill business and other property U Nyein possessed at the time. That being so, the question arises whether the provision of law the respondent invokes in her favour excludes Ma Gale's children from sharing in the inheritance of U Nyein. It has to be noticed that U Nyein died nine years after his marriage with Ma Than and within this period U Nyein and Ma Than appear to have accumulated considerable property. The present claim, therefore, cannot be regarded as unreasonable or unnatural.

The passage on which the respondent relies is contained in section 213 of Mr. U Gaung's Digest of the Burmese Buddhist law, volume 1, page 276. The heading of the section runs thus :—

"After Partition between Children and Surviving Parent, the latter marries again and dies; the Children are not entitled to claim inheritance from the stepfather or stepmother."

The rule which follows is in these terms:—

"After the death of the husband, the wife partitions the property with her children and marries again taking her share with her. On her death the children of her former marriage cannot claim from their stepfather any property which she took to the second marriage; because they have already obtained their shares."

"The same rule applies when, after the death of the wife, the husband marries again after having given the children their respective shares."

It is contended on behalf of Ma Than that under the latter clause, the plaintiffs having received from U Nyein their respective shares, cannot claim any further share in his inheritance. On the side of the plaintiffs it is urged that this latter rule does not occur in any of the other Dhammathats and ought not, therefore, to have effect given to it.

Admittedly this is the only passage which expressly declares that the children will not be entitled to share in the inheritance of their father after a partition in his lifetime alloting them specific shares in the property he possessed.

The Burmese Dhammathats are numerous and the criterion for arriving at a definite conclusion with regard to a particular rule is indicated in the judgment of the Board in the case of Ma Nhin Bwin v. U Schwe Gone (1).

Their Lordships, however, do not think it necessary in the present case to go through all the Dhammathats for the purpose of discovering what the other Dhammathats declare. Nothing has been shown to militate against the authenticity or the binding character of the rule on which the respondent relies; and in the present state of the authorities, their Lordships are not prepared to dissent from the view expressed by the Judicial Commissioner. They are, accordingly, of opinion that this appeal fails and should be dismissed.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty to this effect. There will be no order as to costs.

Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), Pt. II, Ch. X ss. 103-B, 104-H 104-J—Rent Record of Rights, entry in conclusiveness of—Entry as to area—Presumption as to correctness.

When a settlement of rent has been made under Part II of Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the entry in the Record of Rights is conclusive unless altered by means of a suit instituted under section 104-H of the Act. So, too, are other entries in the Record of Rights upon which the rent is settled so far as they affect the rent settled, i.e., in so far as they bear upon the rent settled, and for that purpose only. [p. 1037, col. 2 & p. 1038, col. 1.]

Where, however, the question in controversy is not as to the rent payable but the quantity of the land included in the tenure, the entry in the Record-of-Rights as to area is not conclusive under section 104-J, although under section 103-B such an entry raises a presumption of correctness. JUDGMENT.—This appeal arises out of a suit for recovery of rent.

The plaintiffs-appellants alleged that the defendants held a tenure consisting of 1752 bighas of land at a rent of Rs. 915-12-6 under them, and the rent for the years 1321 to 1324 was claimed in the suit.

The main defence was that the tenure consisted of more than 2000 bighas of land, that the plaintiffs had let out about 600 bighas of land out of the lands of the defendants' tenure, to one Gobinda Mandal who had dispossessed the defendants from a portion of the tenure; that rent had also been realised on plaintiffs' behalf from some of the defendants' tenants on the land, and that the rent payable for the tenure should, therefore, be suspended. The Courts below have concurred in dismissing the suit, and the plaintiffs have appealed to this Court.

Three contentions have been raised on behalf of the appellants. The first is that the Court below is in error in holding that the disputed land was included in the defendants' tenure, and that it had misconstrued the defendants' pottah, dated the 7th March 1839, in so holding. The southern boundary of the lands of the tenure in the pottah was "khas land." It was the case of both parties that "khas land" meant the khas land of the Government, but they differed as to the location thereof. The Court below has elaborately discussed the question and has found that the disputed land was all along treated by the plaintiffs and their predecessors as being included within the defendants' tenure, that rent was assessed upon the disputed land in accordance with the stipulation in the lease, and realized, that the defendants through dargantidars and other tenants had been in possession of the disputed land from the very inception of the tenancy, and that the contractual rights and obligations of the parties under the lease were not affected by the subsequent settlement of some of the disputed lands taken by the plaintiffs in 1908 from the Government. It has also found upon the evidence that the plaintiffs dispossessed the defendants from the disputed lands by realising rents from the defendants under-tenants, and by granting a lease to a third party with respect to a portion of the defendants' tenure. We are of opinion that the pottah has been rightly construed by the Court below, and the above finding cannot be challenged.

The second contention is that the defendants acquiesced in the dispossession, and reliance is placed upon the mortgage-bond, Ex. I, executed by the defendants. But the circumstances under which the mortgage was executed have been stated by the defendants and the statement has been accepted by the Court below.

The last contention is that the entry in the Record-of-Rights which shows that Rs. 820-1-6 was the rent settled for the defendants' tenure of 1752 bighas and odd is conclusive not only as to the rent, but is also conclusive as to the area of the tenure under section 104 J of the Bengal Tenancy Act. That the rent settled under part II of Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act is conclusive under section 104 J, has been held in a number of cases, but the question is whether an entry in the Record of Rights other than the entry as to the rent settled is conclusive.

In the case of Ambica Charan Chakravarti v. Joy Chandra Ghosh (1), plaintiff sued for rent at the rate of Rs. 20 at which it was settled in the settlement proceedings, and the defendant having relied upon a pottah granted before the settlement, and which fixed the rent at Rs. 3-2-0, it was held that the settlement of rent having been made under part II of Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the entry as to the rent was conclusive under section 104 J of the Act. The learned Judges pointed out the distinction between sections 103 B and 104 J, and observed that, " section 104J applies to the rent-roll alone; and to no other part of the Record of-Rights ". No question, however, arose in that case other than as to the rent settled.

In the case of Prosanna Kumar Adhekari v. Rachimuddin (2) there was a kabuliyat in respect of 96 bighas at a rent of Rs. 220 with a stipulation for payment of additional rent if the tenant was found to occupy more land than was specified in the kabuliyat. Subsequently there was a Record-of-Rights, and according to it the defendant was found to hold 117 bighas but the rent was fixed at Rs. 220. The Plaintiff having sued to recover rent for the 117 bighas at a rent of Rs. 268, it was held by Carnduff and Chapman, JJ., that the entry settling the rent was conclusive and observed :—" It appears that a suit was brought under section 104H in respect of the description of the defendant in the Record-of-Rights, and the description was altered from that of an occupancy raiyat to that of an under-raiyat, but no attempt was made under the provisions of section 104 to 104F to alter the entries as to the rental and the area. The latter entries are, therefore, in the view we take of the section, conclusive and this we may remark was the view taken by Stephen and Doss, JJ., in Ambica Charan v. Joy Chandra (1)."

It is to be noted that in Prosonna Kumar's case (2), the learned Judges observed that the " latter entries" (which related to both the area and the rent) are conclusive. But the area was not in dispute in that case ; only the rent was in dispute.

In Baikuntha Nath Ghora v. Prasanna Kumar Mohapatra (3), a rent suit was brought in respect of two tenancies in accordance with the Record-of-Rights. The defence was that the Settlement Officer had re-arranged the holdings and the two holdings were not held as they were originally, but they were different holdings although the same amount of land was comprised in the two holdings. It was argued for the tenant in that case that, although he may not be able to question the amount of rent, he may show that the land is not correctly stated in the Record-of-Rights and that, therefore, he is not liable to pay the rent which had been deemed to be correctly stated. But Fletcher, J., observed : " That seems to me to be quite impossible on the wording of the section. Correctness of the rent means that the amount of rent is correct with reference to the amount of land entered in the record. It is shown quite clearly by section 104 H, sub-section (3) (d), in giving one of the grounds on which a suit can be instituted by a person who is aggrieved by an entry of a rent settled in a settlement rent-roll. It is quite impossible to say that when the rent is deemed to be correctly settled the tenant can go behind the record and show that the record is wrong." It is to be observed that, in that case, the correctness of the area entered in the Record-of-Rights was challenged for showing the incorrectness of the entry as to the rent, which could not be allowed having regard to the provisions of section 104J.

The learned Pleader for the respondents has strongly relied upon the observations quoted above. It is true that the rent of a tenancy is settled with reference to the lands comprised therein, and Cl. (d) of section 104H provides for a suit being instituted on the ground, among others, that the land has been wrongly omitted from the land of a tenancy. But the decision of such question appears to be only incidental to the question of settlement of rent. In the case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Secretary of State (4), the scope of a suit under section 104H was considered, and the learned Judges (Mookerjee and Holmwood, JJ.) observed:— "No doubt, the Court with a view to determine the question whether the entry of rent as settled is erroneous or whether there ought to be an entry of settlement must incidentally examine the grounds assigned by the plaintiffs as set out in the six clauses of sub-section(3) But the Court cannot be called upon, in a suit under section 104H, to make an express declaration upon any of the six matters mentioned in the sub-section."

In the case of Profulla Nath Tagore v. Secretary of State for India (5), the revenue officer in settlement proceedings settled the rent of the lands on the basis of the rent payable to the proprietor ignoring the existence of a tenure and certain holdings purchased by the proprietor in execution of decree for arrears of rent. It was found that the tenure had not merged in the proprietary interest, and the raiyati holdings (purchased before the amendment of the Bengal Tenancy Act in 1908) did not cease to exist. The Courts below held that the Court had no jurisdiction to settle the rent of the tenure and holdings. One of the members of this Bench (Chatterjea, J.) and Panton, J., held that a suit could be maintained on the grounds (d) and (e) of section 104H, and that under sub-section (4) of that section the Court had the power to settle the fair rent payable by the plaintiff as the holder of the tenure and the holdings. A declaration was made as to the right of the plaintiff as tenure-holder and raiyat. The declaration was, however, unnecessary, as it was only incidental to the settlement of fair rent, and for which purpose the case was remanded to the lower Court. The question whether such a declaration could be made in a suit under section 104H does not appear to have been raised in that case, nor does the case of Jogendra Nath Singh v. Secretary of State (4), appear to have been brought to the notice of the Court.

In Prafulla Narain Majumdar v. Palku Mahammad (6), two suits for rent were brought for two holdings, one at the rate of Rs. 50 and the other at the rate of Rs. 30-10-0. The Record-of-Rights showed a jama of Rs. 30-10 only. Subsequently a decree for rent for Rs. 50 was obtained ex parte, but it was found that the decree had been obtained by keeping back the Record-of-Rights, and that it was improbable that one of the jamas under the plaintiff had been omitted from the Record-of-Rights. It was held by Fletcher, J., and one of the members of this Bench (Cuming, J.), that section 104J precluded any evidence being given to contradict the statement as to rent mentioned in the Record-of-Rights where a settlement rent roll had been prepared under the provisions of sections 104A to 104F. It is true that a question arose as to whether there were two jamas, and it was held that there was only one, relying upon the Record-of-Rights, but the actual decision proceeded upon the ground that the entry as to the rent settled could not be contradicted. In any case, there was no express decision that any entry other than of the rent settled was conclusive. In the case of Profulla Nath Tagore v. T. C. Tweedie (7) the conclusive character of an entry as to the rent settled was recognized and the question whether an entry in the Record of-Rights other than as to the rent settled is conclusive was referred to but was not decided. The question in that case was whether having regard to the contract between the parties the landlord was entitled to any rent in respect of the diarah portion (of a big tenure held by the defendant) which was resumed by Government and settled with the landlord the rent whereof was settled in the settlement proceedings and the decision proceeded upon a consideration of the provisions of section 192 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. In the last reported case on the point, Pratap Chandra Jana v. Secretary of State for India in Council (8), it was held by Mookerjee, J., and one of the members of this Bench (Cuming, J.) that when a settlement of rent has been made under Part II of Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the entry in the Record-of-Rights is conclusive unless altered by means of a suit instituted under section 104H. In that case there was no question of the conclusiveness of the area or any entry other than of the rent settled. In the unreported decision of Richardson and Suhrawardy, JJ., (9) all that appears to have been decided was that the rent settled could not be challenged by showing the incorrectness of other entries in the Record-of-Rights.

It will be seen that the decisions are agreed that an entry as to the rent settled is conclusive under section 104J. It may also be conceded that other entries in the Record-of-

Rights upon which the rent is settled cannot be challenged so as to affect the rent settled i.e., in so far as they bear upon the rent settled and for that purpose only. The fact that the suit under section 104H is to be instituted on the grounds mentioned in that section by a person aggrieved by an entry of a rent settled indicates that the other entries in the Record-of-Rights can be challenged under that section only for the purpose of showing the incorrectness of the entry as to the rent settled. But whereas in the present case, the question in controversy is not as to the rent payable but the quantity of land included in the tenure, the determination of which is necessary not for deciding the amount of rent payable for the tenure, but for deciding the question whether the rent should be suspended because the defendants had been dispossessed from a portion of the tenure, we think the entry as to the area is not conclusive under section 104J. Section 104J lays down: "Subject to the provisions of section 104H, all rents settled under sections 104A to 104F and entered in a Record-of Rights finally published under section 103 A or settled under section 104G shall be deemed to have been correctly settled and to be fair and equitable rents within the meaning of this Act." The section refers in terms only to rents settled and does not refer to any other entry in the record, and although a suit may be instituted under section 140H, Cl. (d) on the ground that land has been wrongly recorded as part of a particular estate or tenancy or wrongly omitted from the lands of an estate or tenancy, the decision of such question as pointed out in Jogendra Nath Singh v. Secretary of State (4), is only incidental to the determination of the question whether the entry of the rent as settled is erroneous. If the contention that as the rent of a tenancy is settled with reference to the area comprised in the tenancy, the entry as to the area as well as the rent should be held to be conclusive even in cases where the rent is not in dispute were accepted, we must hold that other entries in the Record-of-Rights, such as an entry as to the status of the tenant (with reference to which also the rent is to be settled) is also conclusive even where the rent is not in dispute. Having regard to the express terms of section 104J which refers only to the rent settled, we are of opinion that the entry as to the area is not conclusive for the purpose for which it is sought to be so used. Such an entry no doubt raises a presumption of correctness under section 103B, but the Court below has found against the entry upon the evidence.

We are accordingly of opinion that the appeal must fail, but we make no order as to costs of this appeal.

THE INDIA GENERAL NAVIGATION AND RAILWAY COMPANY, LIMITED—APPELLANTS

THE DEKHARI TEA COMPANY, LIMITED, AND OTHERS—RESPONDENTS.

Carriers Act (III of 1865), ss. 2, 6—"Common carrier," who is—Liability of common carrier—Steamship Company carrying goods for Railway Company, liability of.

Plaintiffs consigned certain goods to a Railway Company for carriage to a certain destination. Owing to a breakdown on the Railway line, the Railway Company made arrangements with the defendant Steamship Company to carry the goods over a portion of the route by water. The ordinary business of the defendant Company was to transport goods over that portion of the route and no special terms were entered into between the Railway Company and the defendant Company. The goods were destroyed by fire while in the custody of the defendant Company. Plaintiffs sued the defendant Company for damages for loss of the goods;

Held, that the defendant Company was liable to the loss as common carriers of the goods. [p. 1039, col. 2.]

The words "for all persons indiscriminately" which occur in the definition of "common carrier" in section 2 of the Carriers Act, simply mean that persons so engaged in and catering for business satisfy the demands or applications of customers as they come and are not at liberty to refuse business. [p. 1040, col. 1.]

INDIA GENERAL NAVIGATION AND RY. COY. LTD. v. DEKHARI TEA COY. LTD.

This arises from the public employment in which they are engaged. Apart from danger arising, say, from the nature of the goods received, the carrier is by his office bound to transport the goods as clearly as if there had been a special contract which purported so to bind him, and he is answerable to the owner for safe and sound delivery. [p. 1040, col. 1.]

In order to limit the liability of a person who answers the definition of a "common carrier" under the Carriers Act, viz., of transporting for hire goods from place to place for all persons indiscriminately, what is required is that the nature of the contract entered into by him must either have the limitation of his liability under section 6 of the Carriers Act made expressly and in writing, or the facts must be such that for the contract in question the carrier was departing from his usual business and engaging in a different type of business from that of common carrier. [p. 1040, col. 2 & p. 1041, col. 1.]

Appeals against the judgment of the Calcutta High Court, dated the 30th November 1923, affirming a judgment of the High Court on the original side, dated the 19th January 1921.

Messrs. A M. Dunne, K. C., and Kenworthy Brown, for the Appellants.

Messrs. A. Neilson, K. C., and E. F. Spence, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—These are consolidated appeals against decrees dated the 30th November 1921, pronounced by the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal. These decrees affirmed seven decrees of Mr. Justice Rankin dated the 19th January 1921.

The action was directed by the respondents against the Assam-Bengal Railway Company as well as the present appellants, the India General Navigation and Railway Company. It was dismissed by consent against the former, called the Railway Company, and it proceeded against the latter, called the Shipping Company.

The plaintiffs' claim is for damages for the loss of certain tea, part of a consignment of their goods which in November 1915, was delivered by the respondents to the Railway Company for the purpose of transport from Assam to Chittagong for shipment to England. Consignments are in ordinary course thus taken and carried over all the Railway Company's own line without recourse to any other system of transport.

A section of the line, however, south of Lumding, in June 1915, broke down. It had broken down two years previously and arrangements had then been made for taking the goods by ships or flats from Gauhati on the Brahmaputra river down to Chandpur on the Meghna river. At the latter point the goods could again be put on rail and so reach Chittagong. This river service was performed both in 1913 and 1915 by the present appellants. The only bargain on the subject of the goods in the present case was contained in a single letter dated the 11th June 1915, from the Traffic Manager of the Railway Company to the Agents of the Shipping Company and was to the effect that > "All tea from Upper Assam stations for Chittagong will be diverted via Chandpur and Gauhati. The division of the freight between the Steamer Company and this Railway following the precedent of 1913."

No conditions of any kind, other than that, were either produced or proved.

What happened to the goods was that they were conveyed from Bordubi Road (Assam) by rail to Gauhati. The railway having broken down the goods were there put on board the Steamship Company's flat "Cauvery" for carriage by river to Chandpur.

On the 21st December 1915, while the vessel was still lying at Gauhati, a fire broke out and certain of the tea was destroyed.

There were two questions in the case. First, whether the Steamship Company were liable to the respondents, the owners of the goods, in damages as a common carrier; and second, whether if not so liable, they were liable at common law, by reason of the fire having been caused through their negligence. Their Lordships have not thought it necessary to deal with this second legal head of claim, the materials for which are in the evidence, because they are of opinion that the judgments pronounced by both the Courts below on the first point are clearly right, viz., that the Shipping Company in the circumstances described were under the law of India common carriers and answerable to the owner in damages as per the decrees.

It was quite clearly established, to use the language of their own witness, Parrot, one of their staff: "We are undoubtedly common carriers so far as the river portion of the journey is concerned." The case for the appellants, however, was that by reason of the special nature of the contract of carriage entered into in this case the denomination of common carriers could not apply to them nor the liability of common carriers attach.

There was considerable reference made to the law of England. Whether the result under that law would have been in any wise different from that arrived at is doubtful enough ; but the reference was unnecessary, because the point to be decided arises under the law of India. The true question in the appeal simply is whether under the Carriers Act, No. 3, which received the assent of the Governor-General in Council on the 14th February 1865, the definition of common carrier there mentioned covers the appellants quoad the present transaction. That definition is to the following effect:—

"In this Act, unless there be something repugnant in the subject or context—"Common carrier" denotes a person, other than the Government, engaged in the business of transporting for hire property from place to place, by land or inland navigation, for all persons indiscriminately."

It is not denied that the appellants were de facto "engaged in the business of transporting for hire property from place to place by .....inland navigation." The challenge, however, is that this was not done "for all persons indiscriminately." There is no question raised as to the goods being beyond the appellants' carrying capacity ; they in fact, receiving a large consignment, supplied the ships or flats to carry it. So far as the words "for all persons indiscriminately" are concerned these simply mean that persons so engaged in and catering for business satisfy the demands or applications of customers as they come and are not at liberty to refuse business. This arises from the public employment in which they are engaged. Apart from danger arising, say, from the nature of the goods received, the carrier is by his office bound to transport the goods as clearly as if there had been a special contract which purported so to bind him, and he is answerable to the owner for safe and sound delivery.

In the present case all of these propositions are admitted ; but it is said that there was here a contract of a special nature. The specialities in it were two, first that the Shipping Company did in fact assign particular flats for the considerable block of business coming to them at Gauhati by reason of the railway breakdown ; and secondly, that these flats were destined from Gauhati to Chandpur without calling at the ordinary intermediate ports. On the first of these points their Lordships would observe that there is no written proof in the case apart from the letter already referred to, which was simply to the effect that the rate for carriage would be the same as that charged in 1913. And as to special flats being employed there is no trace in the evidence that if there had been other customers' goods awaiting shipment for Chanpur and consigned to Chittagong, these could not and would not have been sent along with the cargo taken over from the Railway Company. In short, the idea of this portion of the river carriage being a temporary and exclusive monopoly for one single customer on special terms entirely disappears.

On the second point, viz., that this was a through route, their Lordships fail to see how that circumstance decategorises the appellants from being common carriers under the statute, or relieves them from their legal obligations as such. In order to effect such a result the particular contract would require to come up to this, that quoad that transaction, another and different type of business had been entered on.

When, for a particular contract, special terms are desired which involve a different category of liability, there is nothing to prevent that being secured; section 6 of the Indian Carriers Act can then be taken advantage of. The language of section 6 is as follows :—

"The liability of any common carrier for the loss of or damage to any property delivered to him to be carried, not being of the description contained in the Schedule to this Act, shall not be deemed to be limited or affected by any public notice ; but any such carrier.....may, by special contract, signed by the owner of such property so delivered as last aforesaid or by some person duly authorised in that behalf by such owner, limit his liability in respect of the same."

The goods were accepted for delivery by the appellants without any such special signed contract for limitation of liability.

What is required in the case of a person who answers the definition under the Indian Carriers Act, viz., of transporting for hire goods from place to place for all persons indiscriminately, is that the nature of the contract entered into must either have the limitation of the liability under the Indian Carriers Act made expressly and in writing or the facts must be such that for the contract in question the contractor was departing from his usual business and engaging in a different type of business from that of common carrier. The Judges in both Courts appear to have not only correctly looked at the case from this point of view, but to have been entirely right in their conclusion. The learned Rankin, J., puts the matter thus :—

"The only question is whether, because it was doing this particular set of journeys for the Railway Company by a special flotilla which was devoted for the time to this purpose only and which was making a through run to Chandpur, it was departing from its usual business and engaging in a different type of business, viz., the business of a sub-contractor for the Railway in such special sense as to take it quoad these journeys out of the avocation of a common carrier. On the whole I think it was not."

Their Lordships agree that the question is correctly thus put in law and the proper answer given in fact.

The learned Sanderson, C. J., quotes the passage just given and agrees with it, as do their Lordships ; and the learned Richardson, J., puts the matter simply, thus :—

"A common carrier cannot divest himself of his responsibilities as such without satisfying the Court that in the particular transaction he acted in some other capacity, and in this case, in my opinion, the appellant Company have not discharged the burden which lay upon them."

The above also appears correct.

As already mentioned all other points in the case have disappeared.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that the appeals should be dismissed with costs.

Where there is an initial probability that an adoption is likely to have been validly made and the conduct of the parties cognisant of the facts has been at last consistent with such an hypothesis, there is sufficient material to justify a presumption that the adoption was valid, even though direct evidence to prove that the necessary preliminaries had been performed is, owing to the lapse of time, not available. Appeal from the decision of the Judge of Agra, dated 16th February 1920.

Dr. Surendra Nath Sen, Munshi Girdhari Lala Agarwala and Babu Surendra Nath Gupta, for the Appellant.

Mr. Nihal Chand, for the Respondent.

JUDGMENT.—These appeals arise out of a suit brought by the plaintiff appellant for the possession of a certain house and for mesne profits. The house originally belonged to a person named Sheola Mal and was his self-acquired property. Sheola Mal had a son Mathra Das and a daughter, who was the mother of Raja Ram and Ram Babu. The allegations of the plaintiff were that Mathra Das had been adopted by Kunj Lal, the brother of Sheola Mal, that on the 13th May 1906 Sheola Mal made a gift of the said house in favour of Raja Ram and Ram Babu ; that Ram Bubu predeceased Raja Ram and left no issue, and that the said house was sold in execution of a decree obtained by Baij Nath against Raja Ram and purchased by the plaintiff on the 18th September 1917.

The defendants on the other hand denied that Mathra Das had been adopted by Kunj Lal and asserted that if such adoption took place, it was invalid because no ceremony of adoption was performed. It was further asserted that Mathra Das and Sheola Mal lived jointly and were joint owners of the said house and that on the death of Sheola Mal it devolved on Mathra Das and his sons. The defendant Moti Lal claimed to have purchased that house, in execution of a decree held by Kunwar Chand and others against the sons of Mathra Das on the 3rd of April 1917. The other defendant Chandra Bhan claimed to have obtained this house from Moti Lal by virtue of a sale made by Moti Lal in his favour.

It appears that a suit had been filed in 1913 by Raja Ram for possession of the southern portion of the upper story of the house in dispute against Musammat Kalawati, the widow of Mathra Das and Raghunath, son of Mathra Das, which was dismissed on the 12th August 1913. The contention of the defendants was that the dismissal of that suit operated as res judicate.

The Court of first instance found that the previous suit operated as res judicata so far as the southern portion of the upper story of the house in dispute was concerned. It held the deed of gift executed by Sheola Mal in favour of Raja Ram and Ram Babu to be valid and Shecla Mal competent to execute it. It also held that the adoption of Mathra Das was proved and that the plaintiff had a good title to the house except as regards that portion about which the previous suit brought by Raja Ram against Musammat Kalawati and Raghunath had been unsuccessful. The lower Appellate Court, however, came to the conclusion that the adoption of Mathra Das was invalid and that the due execution of the deed of gift by Sheola Mal was not established. It also found that the finding in the previous suit that the deed of gift had not been proved operated as res judicata and was binding on the parties. It accordingly dismissed the suit.

The title of Sheola Mal, to the entire house is no longer disputed. The genuineness and validity of the deed of gift are, however, questioned. The deed is registered and is proved by the scribe to have been signed by Sheola Mal. But its due attestation is not established. The deed of gift recites that Sheola Mal had given his son Mathra Das in adoption to Kunj Lal, that Mathra Das was in possession of the property belonging to Kunj Lal in that capacity, and that his daughter's son Raja Ram and Ram Badu, whose parents were dead, were living with him and were being maintained at his expense. It then goes on to convey the entire house to Raja Ram and Ram Babu. That gift was attested by several witnesses, who state that the scribe took it to them for attestation. That evidence has been considered by the lower Appellate Court to be insufficient to prove due attestation and the learned Counsel for the plaintiff appellant concedes that he is not in a position to challenge the correctness of that finding. That being so the deed of gift must be treated as inoperative.

There is another reason, however, why it is not open to the plaintiff to rely on the deed of gift in proof of his title. In the previous suit filed by Raja Ram against Musammat Kalawati and Raghunath, the execution of the deed of gift had been held to be not proved. That suit was decided after some portion of the evidence adduced by the plaintiff had been recorded. An adjournment had been obtained to produce other evidence on condition of the plaintiff paying certain costs to the opposite party but those costs were not paid. When the case eventually came up for decision on the adjourned date, the pleader for the plaintiff stated that he had no instructions and the Court proceeded to try the suit on the merits and came to the conclusion that the deed of gift had not been proved. That finding was finding arrived at in a suit to which the predecessor-in-title of the present plaintiff and the predecessor-in-title of the present defendent were parties, and it is not open to the plaintiff to go behind that finding in the present suit. It is argued on behalf of the plaintiff appellant that the Court which tried that suit was not competent to try the present one, because the value of the property now in dispute exceeds the sum of Rs. 1,000 and the Court which tried that suit could not, therefore, have tried the present one; but the value of the house as put down in the present plaint is only Rs. 1,000. There is an additional claim for Rs. 42 mesne profits; but that claim cannot be taken into account in determining whether the finding arrived at in the previous suit was arrived at by a Court which was competent to try the subsequent suit. The finding in the previous suit, therefore, operates as res judicata in the present suit.

If that finding is binding on the parties to the present suit, the title, which the plaintiff seeks to establish by virtue of that deed of gift, must fail altogether. It is, however, contended that even if that gift be treated as invalid, the plaintiff ought to succeed because Raja Ram and Ram Babu would, on the allegations made in the plaint, be also the legal heirs of Sheola Mal and were entitled to his property on his death. That leads us to the question whether Mathra Das had been adopted by Kunj Lal and whether that adoption was valid. On that point it is necessary in the first place, to refer to the deed of gift where the adoption is recited. In the second place, some evidence was adduced on behalf of the plaintiff to prove that adoption which was accepted by the Courts below. The ceremony of Datta Homa was not shown to have been performed but the validity of the adoption cannot be questioned now. As observed by their Lordships of the Privy Council in Bal Gangadhar Tilak v. Shri Srinivas (1) the performance of the ceremony is not really necessary where the adoptive father and the son to be adopted belong to the same gotra. The lower appellate Court points out that according to the statement of Kama Mal, a witness produced by the plaintiff, Kunj Lal himself had been adopted by his brother-in-law Beni Ram and as Beni Ram must necessarily have been of a different gotra from Kunj Lal the adoption of Mathra Das by a person of a different gotra was invalid unless it was accompained by the performance of the said ceremony. That was not, however, the ground set up by the defendants in their defence in derogation of the adoption. A solitary statement of that character elicited in cross-examination from a witness of the opposite party, which the opposite party had no opportunity for explaining cannot be utilized for the purpose of founding an objection which had not previously been taken or put into issue. It is possible that the plaintiff might have a good explanation as to how that statement was made or as to how such an adoption had taken place and could have been valid. In any case a plea of that character cannot be allowed to be entertained at a stage, when it is not open to the other party to meet it by calling other evidence. In fact in the memorandum of appeal filed by the defendant in the lower Appellate Court, no such plea had been taken and that plea must, therefore, be ruled as inadmissible.

In any event the adoption of Mathra Das took place according to the deed of gift about 48 years ago and by virtue of that adoption Mathra Das was described as having been in possession of the property of Kunj Lal. In a suit filed in 1905 by a creditor of Mathra Das, the latter was described as the adopted son of Kunj Lal. The adoption has not been challenged by any member of the family during the last 48 years and though definite evidence is not now forthcoming to prove that the Datta Homa ceremony had been performed at the time the adoption took place, it is permissible to presume from the fact that the adoption had not been challenged for such a long period that if the ceremony was necessary, it must have been performed. In Chandra Kunwar v. Chaudhri Narpat Singh (2) their Lordships of the Privy Council, relying on an admission of the factum of adoption made by one of the parties to the proceeding observed that :—

" The admission shifted the onus from the other party to the party by which such admission had been made until the presumption that that admission was true was rebutted or satisfactorily explained."

In Har Shanker Partab Sing v. Lal Raghuraja Singh (3) their Lordships said, that " Where there was initial probability that the adoption was likely to have been validly made and the conduct of the parties, cognizant of the facts, has been at least consistent with such an hypothesis, there was sufficient material to justify a presumption that the adoption was valid, even though direct evidence to prove that the necessary preliminaries had been performed was, owing to the lapse of time, not available."

The plaintiff could not have been reasonably expected at this distance of time to produce direct evidence to establish what preliminaries had been performed 48 years ago. Sheola Mal is dead. So is Kunj Lal. So also Mathra Das. The evidence, which would have been available, had the adoption been challenged soon after it was made, has naturally disappeared with the lapse of time. In these circumstances it is reasonable to presume in the absence of anything to show the contrary that everything necessary that would have made the adoption valid was done ; for if that had not been done, some one or other of the family of Sheola Mal or of Kunj Lal would have taken some steps within this long period to challenge the adoption or to claim the property that had been left by Kunj Lal. The ground upon which the lower Appellate Conrt has held the adoption to be invalid cannot, therefore, be accepted.

If the adoption is valid, the necessary result would be that the property of Sheola Mal would devolve on his death irrespective of the deed of gift on Raja Ram and Ram Babu, his daughter's sons, and on the death of Ram Babu, his interests would devolve on Raja Ram and the sale held in execution of the decree and the purchase by the plaintiff of the interests of Raja Ram at a sale held in 1917 must be treated as valid and effectual.

It only remains to consider the question of res judicata, which has been raised on behalf of the defendants. As we have already pointed out, the decision in the previous suit must be treated as final, so far as it relates to the southern portion of the upper storey, which was the subject-matter of the claim at that time. That suit having been dismissed and the dismissal not having been set aside, that decision would operate as a final adjudication of the rights of the parties so far as that claim went. The defendants were present to prosecute their defence and the result of that decision was to invest them with an indefeasible title to the property, which was then the subject-matter of the claim of Raja Ram and over which they continued in possession till their rights were sold by auction and purchased by the defendant No. 2. The same, however, cannot be said about the remaining portion of the property. The cause of action alleged in the previous suit was that the defendants to that suit had taken possession of the southern portion of the upper storey with the permission of the agents of Raja Ram and Ram Babu during their minority and that they were wrongfully refusing to vacate the same. The title by virtue of which Raja Ram claimed to derive his right to sue was the deed of gift said to have been executed by Sheola Mal. The deed of gift not having been proved, the claim of Raja Ram failed. But the present suit, so far as it relates to the remaining property is, however, based on a different title and a different cause of action. So far as the deed of gift is concerned the title is common and must be set aside as no longer enforceable but so far as the right which Raja Ram and Ram Babu claim to derive by inheritance as daughter's sons of Sheola Mal is concerned, that title had not been tried or determined in the previous suit. It might have been open to Raja Ram to have set up that title as an alternative ground of attack but that omission could not operate to deprive him of his right to set up that title in regard to property which was not then in dispute. The cause of action in the present suit is also different. By virtue of his purchase at auction Moti Lal claims to have obtained possession of the disputed house and the decision in the previous suit cannot, therefore, affect the property, which was not the subject matter of the claim in the previous case.

It has been strenuously argued on behalf of the defendants-respondents that the plaintiff-appellant ought not to be allowed to urge in support of his claim an alternative title, which had not been expressly set up either in the plaint or in the memorandum of appeal filed in the lower Appellate Court. In the plaint Raja Ram and Ram Babu were described as the sons of the daughter of Sheola Mal and a reference was also made to the deed of gift executed in their favour by their maternal grand-father. The relationship set up in the plaint was denied by the defendants but it was found by the Courts below that Raja Ram and Ram Babu were the sons of the daughter of Sheola Mal. The daughter had died in the life-time of Sheola Mal. That gift was upheld by the Trial Court and it was obviously unnecessary to press an alternative title, when the other title had been duly recognized and accepted. It is not possible to say whether before the lower Appellate Court the title derived by inheritance was urged; but the facts established are so plain that prima facie it would be doing injustice to deny to the plaintiff a right to which he is entitled on that basis. In Skinner v. Naunihal Shingh (4) their Lordships of the Privy Council permitted an alternative case set up by the appellant on appeal to be the ground of judgment because "It seemed possible in that way to construct the material for a just decision of the true rights of the parties concerned which would be the best in the interests of all and prevent further litigation."

We allow S. A. No. 543 of 1920 and dismiss S. A. No. 544 of 1920 and setting aside the decree of the lower Appellate Court restore that of the Court of first instance except in so far that the parties will bear their own costs throughout.

Succession Act (X of 1865), s. 111, applicability of, to Punjab—Hindu Law—Will—Gift over, conditions and validity of.

Section 111 of the Succession Act is applicable to cases governed by the Hindu Wills Act, but as the latter Act is not applicable to the Punjab, section 111 of the Succession Act has no application to the case of a Will made by a Hindu in the Punjab. [p. 1047, col. 1].

It is competent to a Hindu to make a devise of an absolute estate defeasible on the happening of subsequent event. But the event must happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being at the death of the testator, and the gift over must be in favour of somebody in existence at the death of the testator. It is immaterial whether the property dealt with is ancestral or self-acquired. [p.1047, col. 2.]

Appeal from the decree of the District Judge, Jullundur, dated the 14th August 1920, reversing that of the Subordinate Judge, Jullundur, dated the 14th July 1919.

Dr. Nand Lal, for the Appellants.

Lala Badri Das, for the Respondents.

JUDGMENT.—The facts of the case giving rise to this appeal are so fully detailed and discussed in the judgments of the two Courts below that it will serve no useful purpose to recapitulate them for the purposes of this appeal.

It appears that there were five sons of one Punjab Singh. Two of his sons Sher Singh and Hakam Singh used to live jointly. The latter died leaving three sons and a widow who married Sher Singh by whom she had a son Baggu. Sher Singh executed a Will on the 25th of August 1896. The material portion of the Will is translated and given in the judgment of the lower Appellate Court. It runs thus :—

"After my death my property moveable and immoveable would be owned that is inherited by Hardit Singh, Nand Singh, Dewa Singh, the sons of Hakam Singh, and Baggu, the son of Sher Singh, as follows :—

Sons of Hakam one-half, Baggu one-half. In case any son of Hakam dies childless, his share would be divided by the remaining sons of Hakam Singh and Baggu or their descendants half and half, and if Baggu dies childles, his estate will go to the sons of Hakam."

Sher Singh died in March 1918. On the 25th of May 1918, effect was given to this Will by mutating the names of the sons of Hakam Singh, in respect of half of the property and in respect of the other half in favour of Baggu. Subsequently Baggu also died on the 22nd of December 1918, without leaving any child and his estate was mutated in the names of the defendants, the sons of Hakam Singh. The plaintiffs, two of whom are the brothers of Sher Singh and one, the son of Thakar, another brother of Sher Singh, brought a suit claiming three-fourths of the estate of Sher Singh and challenged the Will on three grounds, namely : (1) that it was invalid being opposed to the custom applicable to the parties : (2) because Sher Singh had no power to make any disposition with regard to Baggu's property ; and (3) that there being a provision in favour of unborn persons the Will could not be supported according to law and custom. A fourth contention was also raised that Sher Singh was not competent according to custom or law to make a gift over to take effect in favour of the three sons of Hakam Singh after the demise of Baggu. A contention was also raised as to the ancestral character of the property. The Trial Court on these pleadings framed seven issues, namely :—

(1) Whether the property is ancestral ?

(2) Whether Sher Singh was the sole owner of the houses in dispute ?

(3) Whether the deceased executed the Will, dated the 25th August 1896, for services, and whether it was valid ?

(4) Whether Sher Singh was competent to dispose of Baggu's property, and whether such a Will was valid ?

(5) Whether a declaratory suit lies regarding the moveables ?

(6) If so, how much moveable property did Sher Singh leave, and is the Will invalid regarding that ?

(7) To what relief are the plaintiffs entitled ?

The Court found the land to be ancestral. It also held that as the houses belonged to an agricultural community they should also be held to be ancestral property. As regards the power of Sher Singh to execute the Will the Could held that he was justified under the law and custom to execute it. The Court, however, held that Sher Singh had no power to make any provision with regard to the future devolution of the property after the death of. Baggu. Evidently the Court relied on the well-known rule laid down in the celebrated case of Tagore family prohibiting the creation of a line of succession as opposed to the succession laid down in Hindu Law. The Court accordingly decreed the claim of the plaintiff with regard to the three-eighths of the property, namely, that representing the share of Baggu ; but it dismissed the suit with regard to the half of the property which had been devised in favour of the sons of Hakam.

Both the parties preferred appeals against the decision of the Trial Court.

PREM SINGH v. HARDIT SINGH

The lower Appellate Court dismissed the appeal of the plaintiffs but decreed that of the defendants and dismissed the plaintiffs' suit in toto: The plaintiffs have come up in second appeal to this Court and an elaborate argument has been addressed to us on their behalf by their learned Counsel Dr. Nand Lal. The first contention put forward by the learned Counsel was that the Will of Sher Singh was invalid inasmuch as it was not warranted by the custom applicable to the parties. The question of custom, however, was decided in favour of the validity of the Will by the lower Appellate Court and an attempt was made in this Court to question that finding. No certificate as required by section 41 of the Punjab Courts Act has, however, been produced and we have, therefore, not allowed Dr. Nand Lal to address to us any argument on the question of custom.

The main contention upon which the decision of the appeal depends was put forward by Dr. Nand Lal with some force. In support of his argument the learned Counsel first relied upon the provisions of section 10 of the Transfer of Property Act. That section, however, has no bearing on the question before us. He then relied on the provisions of section 111 of the Indian Succession Act. His attention having been drawn to the provisions of section 331 of the Indian Succession Act he very properly dropped this contention. As held by the lower Appellate Court section 111 has been made applicable to cases governed by the Hindu Wills Act. This Act, however, is not applicable to this Province. Therefore, section 111 of the Indian Succession Act cannot apply.

The real question which has been dealt with with great ability by the learned District Judge in appeal and which we have to decide here is whether Sher Singh was competent to make a gift over in favour of the sons of Hakam Singh to take effect on the death of Baggu. There is no dearth of authority on this point. The question was clearly decided by their Lordships of the Privy Council so far back as 1862 in the case of Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dassee v. Denobundoo Mullick (1). At page 135 of the report [9 M. I. A.] their Lordships are reported to have made the following weighty observation :—

"Whatever may have formerly been considered the state of that law as to the testamentary power of Hindus over their property, that power has now long been recognized, and must be considered as completely established. This being so, we are to say, whether there is anything against public convenience, anything generally mischievous, or anything against the general principles of Hindu Law in allowing a testator to give property, whether by way of remainder, or by way of executory bequest (to borrow terms from the law of England) upon an event which is to happen if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being. Their Lordships think that there is not ; that there would be great general inconvenience and public mischief in denying such a power, and that it is their duty to advise Her Majesty that such a power does exist".

The learned Counsel for the appellant has tried to distinguish the facts of the present case, from those of the case decisided by their Lordships on the ground that in the latter case the devised property was the self-acquired property of the testator. It is, however, clear that the Privy Council decision did not turn upon this circumstance. The question really to be considered was whether a Hindu, who had a power to transfer his property, could make a will with a gift over and their Lordships decided in the affirmative. It will serve us useful purpose to cite here the numerous authorities which have followed the decision of their Lordships. In almost all the text books the rule on the subject is laid down in the clearest terms and no doubt can possibly exist as to it now.

Mulla in his Principles of Hindu Law, 3rd Edition, in paragraph 314 has thus stated the rule :—

"It is competent to a Hindu to make a grant of an absolute estate defeasible on the happening of a subsequent event. But the event must happen, if at all, immediately on the close of a life in being at the death of a testator, and the gift over must be in favour of somebody in existence at the death of the testator."

On the facts admitted in the present case all the conditions laid down in this rule are satisfied. This rule is thus stated in Trevelyan on Hindu Law, 2nd Edition, page 541:—

(1) 9 M.I.A. 123 ; 1 Sar P. C. J. 837 ; 19 E. R. 683.

Before the passing of the Hindu Transfers and Bequests Act, 1914, and the Hindu Disposition of Property Act, 1916, a gift by will upon an event which was to happen, if at all, immediately at the close of a life in being would be good if the donee be in existence at the time of the death of the testator, but not otherwise On these conditions an estate could be divested."

Mayne in his book on Hindu Law and Usage has dealt with the matter elaborately and has referred to the decision of their Lordships in the case already referred to. The whole question is freely discussed at pages 586 and 587, 9th Edition.

A similar view was taken by the learned Judges of the Punjab Chief Court in Ram Chand v. Dewan Chand (2). Although no reference is made to the decision of their Lordships of the Privy Council in Sreemutty Soorjeemoney Dassee v. Denobundoo Mullick (1) in that case the principle decided therein is exactly the same as that laid down by their Lordships.

Our decision in this appeal is in no way contrary to the decision of a Division Bench of this Court in the case of Mohan Lal v. Niranjan Das (3). The will, the provisions of which were the subject of consideration in that case, by its third clause provided as follows:—

" The house known as Garhiwala, situate at Lahore, Kusha Mutsaddi Mal, was acquired by me (Rai Bahadur Gopal Das). It adjoins the walls of the house of Pundit Ganesh Das. Mt. Uttam Devi, my wife, will be the owner of this house. She will be at liberty to alienate it or dispose of it according to her wishes. None of my descendants will have any concern with it during her life-time. If my wife does not give or alienate it to any person, it will remain the joint property of Niranjan Das and Narsingh Das, my grand-sons."

The Division Bench, following the rule laid down by the Calcutta High Court in the case of Sures Chandra Palit v. Lalit Mohan Dutta (4), held that the provision as to the gift over was void for uncertainty. One of the rules stated by the Calcutta Judges was that " when an absolute interest has been given to the first taker, followed by a gift over of what may not be required by him, the gift over, though concluded in the most direct and precise words is void for uncertainty." From the following passages in the judgment of the Lahore case it is further made clear that the gift in that case was held to be void on the ground of uncertainty:—

" The first case was decided by the Bombay High Court before the decision of the Privy Council in Surajmani v. Rabi Nath Ojha (5). Moreover, there was no element of uncertainty as to the devolution of the property in that case as the whole property was kept intact to be handed over to Mahalakshmi, see Lallu v. Jagmohan (6).

" The second case Ram Chand v. Dewan Chand (2), is also clearly distinguishable. In the Will construed in that case power of alienation was not given to Musammat Durga Devi. It was clearly understood that the whole property was to go intact to Hukam Devi."

In the present case there is no element of uncertainty. Therefore, the gift in this case cannot be held to be void on that ground.

The learned Judge of the Court below, in our opinion, took the correct view of the law and arrived at a correct decision. We, accordingly, dismiss this appeal with costs.

KOTAKAL v. MALABAR TIMBER CO.

BOMBAY HIGH COURT.

ORIGINAL CIVIL JURISDICTION SUIT

NO. 1399 OF 1921.

March 31, 1924.

Present:—Mr. Justice Fawcett.

K. C. SHRIMAN NEDAN RAJAH KOTAKAL—PLAINTIFF

versus

THE MALABAR TIMBER CO. LTD. AND OTHERS—DEFENDANTS.

Letters Patent (Bom.) cl. 12—Land situate outside jurisdiction—Suit to declare charge on land—High Court, power of.

The Bombay High Court has, under Cl. 12 of its Letters Patent, jurisdiction in personam in regard to lands situate outside its teritorial jurisdiction, and can grant relief by way of a declaration of a charge on such lands. [p. 1049, col. 2, p. 1051, col. 2, p. 1052, col. 2.]

Case-law reviewed.

Mr. Bahadurji, with Mr. Kanga and Mr. B. J. Desai, for the Plaintiff.

Mr. M. V. Desai, with Mr. Munshi, Mr. Taraporevala, with Mr. M. C. Setalvad, for the Defendants.

FACTS.—The plaintiff a resident of Malabar, who held certain forest rights in a forest in Malabar outside the original jurisdiction of the Bombay High Court sold them to the 2nd Defendant a firm of merchants at Bombay, who again sold the same to the 1st Defendant.

In a suit by the plaintiff against both defendants for recovery of the balance of unpaid purchase money, he prayed for a declaration that he was entitled to a charge on the properties sold and for sale thereof in default of payment of the decree amount.

The Defendant contended inter alia that the forest being outside the jurisdiction of the Court, the Court had no jurisdiction to grant the prayers relating to the immoveable properties. A preliminary issue was joined on the question of jurisdiction and the Court delivered the following

JUDGMENT.—This issue comprises two main questions,

(i) Whether, as ruled in Holkar v. Dadabhai Cursetji Ashburner (1), this Court, has, under Cl. 12 of its Letters Patent, jurisdiction in personam in regard to lands outside the original jurisdiction of this Court; and

(ii) If so, whether this suit is one in which such jurisdiction can properly be exercised.

In regard to the first point I think the answer should be in the affirmative, for the following reasons :—

(a) The decision in Holkar v. Dadabhai (1) is one that prima facie binds me sitting as a Judge on the Original Side of this Court, and unless it is shown to have been overruled, or shaken to an extent that ought to prevent me from following it, I am bound by that decision. In Sundara Bai Sahiba v. Tirumal Rao Sahib (2), it is said that the authority of this decision and of Sorabji Cursetji sett v. Rattanji Dossobhoy Karam (3) is considerably shaken, if they are not overruled by the later decision in Vaghoji v. Camaji (4). But there are really five distinct questions involved in these cases, viz.

1. Whether a suit 'for land' within the meaning of this Cl. 12 is confined to a suit for the recovery or delivery of land. So far as Holkar v. Dadabhai (1) might be said to support this view, it is no doubt shaken by Vaghoji v. Camaji (4) but Jenkins, C. J. points out at pp. 254-5 that really the decision in Holkar's case (1) is not based on any such view.

2. Whether a suit 'for land' extends to a suit where the purpose is to obtain a declaration of title to foreign land. This is decided in the affirmative in Vaghoji v. Camaji (4) but is not dealt with in the other two cases.

3. Whether the High Court of Bombay has all the powers of a Court of Equity in England for exercising jurisdiction in personam in regard to land outside the jurisdiction. This was directly decided in the affirmative in Holkar's case and Jenkins C. J. (1), in Vaghoji v. Camaji (4) takes that decision as binding (see at page 255) : so the two previous Bombay decisions are certainly not overruled or shaken, so far as they proceed on deciding that question in the affirmative.

(1) 14 B. 353; 7 Ind. Dec. (N.S.) 635.
(2) 3 Ind. Cas. 930; 33 M. 131; 20 M. L. J. 103; 6 M. L. T. 263.

4. If so, whether such jurisdiction exists, even though the defendant does not reside or carry on business or personally work for gain in Bombay. This is impliedly decided in the affirmative by Holkar's case (1), for the defendant there did not reside or trade or carry on business in Bombay (see at pages 354-5), though no reference to this point is made in the judgment ; it is also decided affirmatively in Sorabji v. Rattonji (3), but merely on the basis of previous binding authority. The point is not referred to in Vaghoji v. Camaji, (4) so these decisions cannot be said to be affected by that case. They are no doubt affected by the criticism that a Court of Equity in England does not ordinarily exercise such jurisdiction in personam, except against persons residing or carrying on business within its jurisdiction. There are, however, exceptions such as one referred to in Jenney v. Mackintosh (5) and Duder v. Amsterdamsch Trustees Kantoor (6), compare Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 3rd Edition page 226, foot-note (g), and Rule 60, pages 250-278.

In the unreported case of Venkatrao Sethupathy v. Khimji Assur Virji (7) the Court of Appeal has held that such jurisdiction does exist, not only in cases where the defendants or some of them reside permanently within the jurisdiction but in cases where, according to the provisions of the Letters Patent, they have been lawfully caused to appear upon summons and where the cause of action or part of it has arisen in Bombay. It is, however, open to question whether this does not go further than the corresponding law in England which seems to allow of such extended jurisdiction outside the Court's territorial jurisdiction only when there is already one defendant who resides or carries on business in England: cf Dicey's Conflict of Laws, 3rd Edn., Exception 7 at p. 265.

5. Whether such jurisdiction can be exercised to the extent of passing a decree which may affect the possession or control of the foreign land, e.g., by ordering a mortgage debt to be realised by sale of the land. This is answered in the affirmative by the decision in Holkar's (1) and Sorabji's (3) cases; but the question is not directly dealt with in Vaghoji v. Camaji (4) though some remarks in the judgment as to the limitation on the jurisdiction exercised by a Court of Equity in England (at pages 256-7) may be said to weaken the authority of those decisions. On the other hand the judgment in Venkatrao Sethupathy v. Khimji Assur Virji (7) holds that such a suit is not a suit for land.

Therefore, it seems to me that the decision in Holkar's case (1) is not affected by Vaghoji v. Camaji (4) except in regard to points (1) and (5) and that it is confirmed in regard to point (3), which is the main question now before me. Nor, for the reasons given in my interlocutory judgment No. 1, do I think that the Bombay decisions have been overruled by the Privy Council in Harendra Lal Roy Chowdhuri v. Hari Dassi Debi (8).

(b) On the contrary it seems clear that there are two cases where such jurisdiction in personam has been exercised by the Madras and Calcutta High Courts respectively, and the Privy Council have held that the High Courts had jurisdiction to do so. In Nistarini Dassi v. Nundo Lall Bose (9) the Judge pointed out that in regard to the lands in suit he was exercising this jurisdiction in personam, and in the same case on appeal to the Privy Council Benode Behary Bose v. Nistarini Dassi (10), at page 191, the Privy Council approved of this, saying :—

"The High Court of Calcutta, in its Ordinary Jurisdiction, had a right to order administration of this estate, and, as ancilliary to such an order, to set aside deeds obtained by the fraud of the executor. Nor does the circumstance that a decree had been granted by the Court of the 24-Pergunnahs making a fraudulent award an order of Court protect that decree from the jurisdiction of the Calcutta Court, when redressing that fraud. like manner, their Lordships consider the Calcutta High Court entitled, for the due administration of the estate, to set aside leases of land outside the territorial limits of their jurisdiction, those leases having been made as an incident of the same fraud."

Similarly in another administration suit, Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Ayyangar, (11), the judgment of Subramania Ayyar, J. shows that similar jurisdiction in personam was exercised by the Madras High Court in regard to land outside Madras, and the High Court's jurisdiction was confirmed as "too plain for argument" by the Privy Council in the same case on appeal: Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Aiyangar (12). I may further refer to the remarks of Sir Arnold White C. J. in his judgment in Srinivasa Moorthy v. Venkata Varada Ayyangar (11), that the law of England may be looked to for the purpose of ascertaining the intention of the legislature in enacting clause 12 of the Letters Patent, which support the decision in Holkar v. Dadabhai (1).

(c) A point to be remembered is that clause 12 of the Letters Patent is similar in language to section 5 of the first Civil Procedure Code of 1859, and the close connection between the two is pointed out by Jenkins, C.J. in Sudamdih Coal Co. Ld. v. Empire Coal Co. Ld. (13). The provisions of this section 5 were changed in the next Code of Civil Procedure, Act X of 1877, section 16 of which was enacted in almost the same terms as the present section 16 of the Code of 1908. This in effect gives a definition of the expression 'suits for the land', but contains a proviso which substantially allows the jurisdiction in personam in regard to foregin lands, such as is referred to in Holkar v. Dadabhai (1). It was with reference to section 5 of the Code of 1859 that it was ruled in Yenkoba Balshet Kasar v. Rambhajivalad Arjun (14), and in John Young v. Mangalapilly Ramaiya (15), that such jurisdiction in personam could be exercised by a moffussil Court, and the legislature has clearly endorsed that view. As pointed out in the arguments of Latham, Advocate-General, in Holkar v. Dadabhai (1), (at page 356), this Court has always since Yenkoba v. Rambhaji (14) exercised this jurisdiction in personam; and it would be a strange anomaly if the High Court is deprived of the power of exercising this valuable form of equitable jurisdiction, in consequence of strict construction of the words 'suits for land' in clause 12 of the Letters Patent, while a moffussil Subordinate Judge's Court is allowed to exercise such jurisdiction. (Compare Kashinath v. Anant (16) and Durga Das v. Jai Narain (17). It seems to me that the effect of the decision in Holkar v. Dadabhai (1), and the settled practice of this Court in regard to that jurisdiction is to add a proviso to clause 12, similar to that contained in section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908.

(d) It is not necessary for me to consider whether a suit to enforce a charge on immoveable property cannot be said to be one within this personal jurisdiction, inasmuch as in such a case the relief sought cannot be completely obtained by personal obedience of a defendant residing or carrying on business in the jurisdiction, but in the last resort entails a sale of the land in order to enforce the charge. Nor need I enter into the wider question (5) that I have mentioned in the para. (a) of this judgment. The only relief affecting the land which is sought in this suit is the declaration of a charge upon it and it seems to me obvious that such a declaration is, at the worst, on the same footing as an injunction which can undoubtedly be issued in the exercise of this personal jurisdiction. If an injunction can be issued against the defendants restraining them from dealing with or disposing of the land in such a way as to obstruct or defeat this particular charge, a fortiori a declaration is a form of relief which can be given in exercise of this jurisdiction in personam. It may be pointed out that one result of such a declaration would be to put the plaintiff in the position of a secured creditor as against the defendant No. 1 Company, should it become insolvent or be wound up and that is a right which might be of very considerable importance to him in Bombay as against the liquidator who would have jurisdiction in regard to this land although it is outside Bombay. Compare the proviso to section 17 of the Presidency Towns' Insolvency Act, (1909). Even if, as ruled in Webb v. Macpherson, (18) the plaintiff has a statutory charge upon the land different from the equitable vendor's lien given by the English Law, still he would have the advantage of having had his right to this charge adjudicated upon by a competent Court in a suit to which the Company is a party. This in effect will simply declare an obligation of the kind referred to in sections 91 and 95 of the Indian Trusts Act, 1882, and is one which undoubtedly could be given by a Court of Equity in England. If I am wrong, then the question still remains whether I am not bound by the decisions in Holkar's and Sorabji'i cases (3) as well as the unreported judgment of this High Court in Venkatrao Sethupathy v. Khimji Assur Virji (7), which has already been referred to.

(e) No doubt defendant No. 3 is not alleged to reside or carry on business in Bombay, but he is not concerned with the relief sought in regard to the land, which now is held by the defendant No. 1 Company. Consequently the question (4) of those mentioned in para. (a) does not arise. In any case admittedly he was a mere nominee of the defendant No. 2 a firm, and the relief (if any) given would not affect him. Even if the suit did involve the grant of relief against him, I should, I think, be bound by Holkar's (1) and Sorabji's (3) cases, which are not affected on this point by Vaghoji v. Camaji (4).

(f) I would add that the view I now take is not, I think, inconsistent with that taken by me in Yeshvadabai v. Janardhan Raghunath (19). When the land is situated in Bombay, a suit to declare a charge on it can be a suit 'for land' within the meaning of clause 12 of the Letters Patent, so as to give this Court jurisdiction over the suit which it otherwise might not have (as in that case and in Sundara Bai Sahiba v. Tirumal Rao Sahib (2). But when the land is situated outside the territorial limits of this Court's jurisdiction, then the words 'suits for land' in clause 12 must be read subject to the qualification or proviso that this Court has a jurisdiction in personam similar to that exercised by a Court of Equity in England, and by a moffussil Court under the proviso to section 16 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1908. If this distinction is borne in mind, it seems to me that much of the difficulties and of the apparent inconsistencies that surround rulings regarding the words 'suits for land' in clause 12 disappears. I recognise that the addition of such a qualification or proviso is outside the ordinary canons of interpretation of a statute or other enactment like clause 12 of the Letters Patent, but it is a modification of the language to meet the intention of the statute—or at any rate what is said by authority binding upon me to have been its intention which is of the kind referred to in Chapter IX of Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes, 3rd Edition, pages 319-22. And it has behind it the authority of being a received construction in this High Court for a large number of years, and of confirmation by the legislature in regard to the similar provisions of section 5 of the Civil Procedure Code of 1859, as compared with the provisions of section 16 of the subsequent Codes. Clause 12 is put in very condensed language and it has been expanded in another way, viz., the received construction as to its being read as if the part now under construction ran as follows:—"(a) In the case of suits for land or other immoveable property, such land or property shall be situated wholly, or in case the leave of the Court shall have been first obtained, in part within the local limits of the ordinary original jurisdiction of the said High Court." See Balaram v. Ramchandra (20) and Govindlal v. Bansilal (21) This exemplifies how it may be legitimate to amplify the words of clause 12 in the way I seek to do.

JUDGMENT.

Spencer, O. C. J.—The plaintiffs brought this suit for a declaration that they and the 1st defendant were the lawfully appointed trustees of the temple of Sri Umamaheswaraswami in Thiruvalam village of Mayavaram Taluk; and they prayed for a direction that the defendants Nos. 2 and 3 should be made to restore the office of trustee to them and for an injunction restraining them from interfering with the exercise of the plaintiffs and 1st defendant of their duties as trustees. They valued the relief asked for at Rs. 5,500. The basis of their title was the order of the Devastanam Committee made in January 1916 appointing the plaintiffs and 1st defendant as trustees. The 4th and 7th issues in the suit raised the question as to the Devastanam Committee's jurisdiction and the right of the plaintiffs derived from their order of appointment.

The lower Court, without deciding these important issues, dismissed the suit as not maintainable on the ground that the plaintiffs did not ask for possesion of the temple and its properties, quoting the authority of Ratnasabhabathi Pillai v. Ramaswami Iyer (1). In my opinion the Subordinate Judge should not have dismissed the suit upon this preliminary point without trying the other issues. In Kunj Behari v. Keshavalal Heralal (2). Sir Lawrence Jenkins, C.J., quotes section 42 of the Specific Relief Act and points out that nothing is said about the dismissing of a suit in the proviso which is in these terms:—"Provided that no Court shall make any such declaration where the plaintiff, being able to seek further relief than a mere declaration of title, omits to do so". In the present litigation the plaintiff is asserting his right to an office of trust. He does not claim any proprietory interest in the temple. As I pointed out in the order of reference in Rajagopal Naidu v. Ramasubramania Iyer (3) it would be preposterous that a trustee, claiming only a right to administer a certain trust, should be compelled to sue for physical possession of all the trust properties against defendants who claim only a similar right of management and that he should be made to pay stamp duty calculated on the total value of the endowments of the trust, which were in that case valued at two lakhs of rupees. In the case of temples, owning very extensive and valuable lands, of which there are many in this Presidency, no one would undertake the duties of a public trustee if such a burden were placed on him before entering his office. In the present instance the plaintiffs, while claiming the restoration of the office to themselves and the 1st defendant, asserted in their plaint that the ownership of the temple was vested in the deity, that they had only a right of managing the temple affairs, and that the temple lands were in the possession of tenants who would attorn to whomsoever might be declared to be the lawful trustees. The 1st defendant set up the right of the villages in contradistinction to the Devasthanam Committee's right to manage this temple, the 2nd and 3rd defendants denied the right of the Devasthanam Committee to interfere in the affairs of this temple, denied also that the ownership of the temple vested in the deity, and set up a right of adverse possession as against the Devasthanam Committee. The lower Court omitted to decide issue 5 which relates to the claim of the defendants that the Committee's right, if any, had been lost by adverse possession. The maintainability of the suit must depend upon the allegations in the plaint and these allegations have not been disproved by evidence. Ratnasabhabathi Pillai v. Ramaswami Iyer (1), relied on by the Subordinate Judge was a suit against the Devasthanam Committee by a plaintiff claiming to be a trustee to recover damages for wrongful dismissal. In his plaint he mentioned that the defendants Nos. 8 and 9 had illegally taken possession of the temple lands and leased out the fishery in the tank and collected rent. The plaintiff in that case having, for reasons best known to himself, combined two actions in one, namely, one action against the temple Committee for the restoration of his trustee's office and for damages, and a second action for the recovery of the trust properties against persons who had wrongfully dispossessed him of such property, was bound to ask for the relief of possession of the temple properties to which he asserted a present right of possession. On the allegations in the plaint in that suit it may have been right to require the plaintiff to add a prayer for possession of the lands and if he refused to do so, his suit might have been dismissed. But he was not bound to sue for possession of the lands before he was restored to office. If he had chosen to strike out from his plaint his statement as to the part played by defendants Nos. 8 and 9 he might have waited till he was restored to his office of trustee, and he might then have brought a separate suit on behalf of the trust to recover the trust properties which had been wrongfully alienated. The facts of the present case closely resemble those in Ramadoss v. Hanumantha Rao (4). In that case also it was stated in the plaint that the temple properties were in the possession of tenants who were ready to pay rent to whomsoever held the office of Dharmakartha and the learned Judges adopting the reasoning of Sir Lawrence Jenkins in Kunj Behari v. Keshaavlal Heralal (2) held that on the allegations in the plaint, which had not been traversed, the suit was maintainable and that the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act was no bar to its maintainability. In my judgment that case was rightly decided although the difference between Rs. 10 and Rs. 2,600 in the plaintiff's valuation of the injunction does not really affect the question. I think that we should follow it, as it is in accordance with Kunj Behari v. Keshavlal Heralal (2) which correctly expounds the effect of the proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. The question whether this temple is under the control of the Devasthanam Committee or belongs to the villagers will have to be decided, also whether the right of the Devasthanam Committee has been lost on account of adverse possession by any of the defendants. Also it must be decided whether one or two trustees can act alone if the appointment was of three trustees and one does not accept the office. The appeal is allowed. The order dismissing the suit is set aside and the suit is remanded for trial on its merits. Costs of the appeal to be borne by the respondents (defendants Nos. 1 to 3). Costs in the lower Court to abide and follow the result of the suit. Appellants are entitled to refund of Court-fee on this appeal.

SWAMINATHA IYER v. RAMIER

Srinivasa Iyengar, J.—I agree with the judgment of my Lord the Chief Justice. The question with regard to the maintainability of the suit as framed was tried originally by the learned Subordinate Judge as a preliminary issue. For some reason not clear on the record instead of coming to a decision on the issue, he called upon the parties to proceed with the trial of the suit adducing evidence and ultimately, after the whole hearing was over, dismissed the suit on the preliminary ground originally raised regarding the maintainability of the suit itself, holding that it was not maintainable.

When the question is whether a suit as framed is maintainable or not, what has to be looked to is the plaint and the plaint alone. Reading the plaint in this case, it is clear that it is both in form and in substance a suit for the recovery of an office. The case of Ratnasabhapathi Pillai v. Ramaswami Iyer (1) was relied upon by Mr. T. R. Ramachandra Iyer, the learned Vakil for the respondents, as an authority for the position that all suits for an office are suits for a declaration and that in all such suits, therefore, if the plaintiffs should be able to seek by way of further relief possession of the property relating to the office and omit to do so, the suit would not be maintainable. It is possible, and perhaps also easy to frame a suit which is in substance one for an office as a suit in form only for a declaratory decree and injunction. If in such cases any question should arise with regard to the frame of the action, it would necessarily follow that the suit may be looked upon merely as a suit for a declaration, and all the rules applicable to declaratory suits would also be applicable thereto. But a suit for an office is a well-known form of action and, from the earliest times, all the Courts in this country and their Lordships of the Judicial Committee have frequently referred to such suits.

In explanation to section 9, Civil Procedure Code, the legislature itself has referred to a suit for an office as contradistinguished from a suit in respect of property. Suits for property so called are themselves really suits only for the establishment of certain rights over property. An office, though intangible, is something recognised by the law which attaches to the office certain rights and duties. In the case of Ratnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramaswamy Iyer (1) it is clear not only that the action was in form for a declaratory decree but that the question whether, though in form the suit was for a declaration, it was not in substance a suit for an office does not appear to have been either argued or considered. The learned Judges took the form of the action as they found it and laid down the law as applicable thereto. Though the decision is undoubtedly an authority for the position that the plaintiff in a declaratory suit should also ask for possession, if he is able to ask for such possession, it is scarcely an authority for the proposition contended for that, when in form a suit is for an office, it ought to be deemed to be merely a suit for a declaration and dealt with accordingly.

The real difficulty with regard to the whole question would appear to have arisen by a certain observation of their Lordships in the case of Ramdoss v. Hanumantha Rao (4).

The real ground of decision, as I understand it, of Ramdoss v. Hanumantha Rao (4) is that when the suit is for an office, the plaintiff need not ask for possession of properties relating to the office. But their Lordships in their anxiety to distinguish the case before them from the case of Ratnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramaswamy Iyer (1) have referred to certain circumstances in the case before them. These were that, in the case with which they were dealing, the injunction was valued at a substantial amount. It is difficult to see what the valuation of the relief has to do with the frame of the action except as indicating that, as a suit for an office, it is capable of independent valuation by the plaintiff. The second ground of distinction by the learned Judges referred to is that it was stated in the plaint before them that the temple properties were in the possession of tenants who will pay the rents to whomsoever holds the office of Dharmakartha and that such statement was not traversed in the written statement and should, therefore, be accepted as correct.

Their Lordships proceed to say that if, therefore, the plaintiff gets possession of the office of Dharmakartha, the tenants will pay the rents to him, and the plaintiff will obtain possession to which he is entitled; that is right to collect rent. It is difficult to understand how the mere willingness of the tenants to attorn to the rightful holder of the office can affect the question whether or not the plaintiff is able to ask for further relief by way of possession. I do not understand their Lordships to have signified that in such circumstances it would be impossible for the plaintiff to ask further relief by way of possession or such possession as it is susceptible of.

The third ground of distinction relied upon was that, in the case of Ratnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramasami Iyer (1), and the cases relied on in that judgment, possession of the property may be said to have been adverse to the plaintiff and would have continued to be adverse even after the plaintiff had obtained the declaration sued for.

It is very doubtful if such a ground of distinction is warranted by the terms of the proviso in section 42 of the Specific Relief Act. But their Lordships proceed further referring to the case of Kunj Behari Prasadji Purushotham Prasadji v. Keshavalal Hiraglal (2) and quote with approval the observation of the Chief Justice, Sir Lawrence Jenkins: "How would practical effect be given to an award of possession of an office otherwise than by preventing interference with the rights of which it is made up?" Further on, the learned Judges observe as follows:—"The lands attached to a temple do not belong to a Dharmakartha, who is merley the manager, but belong to the temple or idol, the Privy Council having held that an idol may be regarded as a judicial person capable of holding property."

As I read and understand, therefore, the case in Ramadoss v. Hanumantha Rao (4), the real principle underlying that decision is based exactly on the considerations so clearly and forcibly set out by the present Officiating Chief Justice in his order of reference to a Full Bench reported in the case of Rajagopal Naidu v. Ramasubramania Iyer (3). Further it is significant that, whereas the learned Judges that decided the case of Ramadoss v. Hanumantha Rao (4) approved of the case of Kunji Bihari v. Keshavalal Hiralal (2) the learned Judges who decided the case of Ratnasabapathi Pillai v. Ramaswamy Iyer (1) have disapproved of the same.

I, therefore, prefer to regard and follow the case of Ramadoss v. Hanumantha Rao (4), as a direct authority for the position that, in a suit for an office, no possession of the properties relating to the office need be asked.

I, therefore, respectfully agree to the order proposed.

Adverse possession—Hindu Law—Widow, adverse possession by—Property acquired, nature of.

Where a Hindu widow, who is only entitled to maintenance out of a certain estate, takes possession of the estate as against the reversioners who are immediately entitled to it, her possession is adverse as against the reversioners and after the lapse of the statutory period the title of the latter is destroyed.

A Hindu widow is not a life renter but has a widow's estate, that is to say, a widow's estate in her deceased husband's estate. If possessing as a widow she possesses adversely to any one as to certain parcels, she does not acquire the parcels as stridhan, but she makes them good to her husband's estate, and after her death the parcels pass to her husband's heir. P C LAJWANTI v. SAFA CHAND, 22 A. If subsequently, the same person converts the mortgage into a sale, the sale is equally void as against the minor, but the nature of the mortgagee's possession is altered and from the date of the sale he begins to prescribe for a title as full owner, and after the expiry of the statutory period from the date of the sale, the minor's title to the properties is completely extinguished. ——————— Possession of family property by one heir—Hostile title—Exclusion—Non-participation in profits.

Possession or occupation of joint property by one co-sharer does not constitute adverse possession against any other co-sharer until there has been a disclaimer of the latter's title by an open assertion of hostile title on the part of the former.

To prove title to land by adverse possession for the statutory period, it is not sufficient to show that some acts of possession have been done; the possession required must be adequate in continuity, in publicity and in extent to show that it is possession adverse to the competitor; in other words, the possession must be actually visible, exclusive, hostile, and continued during the time necessary to create a bar under the Statute of Limitation.

What is sufficient evidence of exclusion must depend on the circumstances of each case. Mere non-participation in rents and profits would not necessarily of itself amount to an adverse possession, but non-participation or non-possession may in the circumstances of a particular case amount to an adverse possession. Regard must be had to all the circumstances, and a most important element is the length of time. S BHAGBHARI v. KHATUN, 16 S. L. R. 25 118

A deed of release executed by a co-sharer setting forth an existing title in the subject-matter of the release and accepted by other co-sharers wipes off the adverseness of possession of the latter, if any. O CHHOTEY LAL v. HANOMAN SINGH, 10 O. & A. L. R. 924 619

When a question of law is raised for the first time in a Court of last resort upon the construction of a document or upon facts either admitted or proved beyond controversy it is not only competent but expedient in the interest of justice to entertain the plea. The expediency of adopting that course may be doubted when the plea cannot be disposed of without deciding nice questions of fact, in considering which the Court of ultimate review is placed in a much less advantageous position than the Courts below. But the course ought not in any case to be followed unless the Court is satisfied that the evidence upon which they are asked to decide, establishes beyond doubt that the facts if fully investigated would have supported the new plea.

The general rule is that a suit must be tried in all its stages on the cause of action as it existed at the date of its commencement but under proper circumstances a trial, as well as an Appellate Court may take notice of events which happened since the institution of the suit and afford relief to the parties on the basis of the altered conditions. N NARAYAN v. TULSHI 607

Arbitration—Award based on equitable considerations, validity of—Arbitrator, duty of—Reference, scope of—Award based on erroneous grounds, legality of—Remission of award—Bias of arbitrator—Discretion of Court.

An arbitrator is not competent to pass an award according to what he considers to be an equitable arrangement under the circumstances of a particular case, but must decide according to the legal rights of the parties.

An arbitrator is inflexibly limited to the decision of the particular matters submitted to him and his award must conform both in substance and form to the submission.

Where in his award an arbitrator states reasons for his decision which are erroneous on a point of law, there is an error of law on the face of the award and the award is bad and should be set aside.

A Court should in the exercise of its discretion decline to remit an award to an arbitrator when there is the existence of any circumstance in the situation of the arbitrator which tends to produce a bias in the mind of the arbitrator. S MAHOMEDALI A. stipulating survey of goods—Award made without survey—Jurisdiction.

An error in law on the face of the award which is sufficient to vitiate the award means that the award or some document actually incorporated thereto, as for instance, a note appended by the arbitrator stating the reasons for his judgment, contains a legal proposition which is the basis of the award and which is erroneous.

Ordinarily, where there is a dispute between a buyer and a seller with reference to the quality of goods, it is the duty of the seller to prove that the goods are of the quality contracted for.

Disputes arose between the parties out of a contract for the sale of goods, relating to the quality of the goods and the matter was referred to arbitration, the arbitrators being required to make an award after a survey of the goods. The arbitrators made the following award: "We have considered the papers and as the buyers are unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection, their claim cannot be upheld and we award that they pay for and take delivery of the goods in terms of the contract:

Held, (1) that the mere fact that the buyers were unwilling to produce the bales required for inspection was not by itself a sufficient reason for making an award against them, especially as it was the duty of the sellers to prove that the goods were of the quality contracted for;

(2) that, therefore, the award was vitiated by an error of law which was apparent on the face of the award;

(3) that the award having been made without a survey of the goods was made without jurisdiction and was invalid. C CHANDMUL MULCHAND v. S. & C. NORDLINGER, 28 C. W. N. 261; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 490 151

Although arbitrators should give notice of their intention to proceed ex parte if one of the parties should not appear, the true test in determining whether the absence of such notice would vitiate an award is, whether the party taking exception to the award has, in fact, been prejudiced by the omission of the arbitrators to serve the special notice on him. If it is established that, notwithstanding, such warning, he would not have appeared, he cannot invite the Court to set aside the award on the ground of the alleged defect in procedure ——— Reference, construction of—Error patent on face of award, what amounts to—Award set aside on basis of alleged error patent on face of award—Revision—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), s. 115.

A reference in respect of disputes "concerning the acceptance of a shipment and payment of the same" is not vague and is a sufficient authority for the arbitrators to decide the question of breach of the contract and payment of damages.

In finding out whether there is an error patent on the face of an award Courts are not to investigate beyond the award of the arbitrators and documents actually incorporated therein.

Where from an award itself or any necessary papers attached to it, it appears that the arbitrators have awarded payment of damages to a party who committed breach of a contract, there is an error patent on the face of the award, the arbitrators are guilty of a technical misconduct and the award should be set aside.

Where an award is ordered to be taken off the file on the ground of there being an error patent on the face of the award, whereas there is no such error to be found on the face of the award the Court assumes jurisdiction which, as a matter of law, it does not possess, to interfere with the findings of the arbitrators and such an order is liable to be set aside in revision. S RAMJIBHOY & Co. v. YUSIFALI MAHOMEDALI 403

——— Reference not in writing—Award, validity of Position of arbitrator.

An award is nonetheless valid though the reference to arbitration was not in writing.

———, reference to, what amounts to—Intention of parties—Error of law, what amounts to—Award specifying amount payable in pounds—Rate of exchange not specified—Uncertainty.

Where it appears from the terms of an agreement for the settlement of disputes that the intention of the parties was that there should be an inquiry in the nature of a judicial inquiry, and that their respective cases should be heard and a decision arrived at upon the evidence there is a reference to arbitration.

A contract for the purchase of goods contained the following clause:—"In the unlikely event of our failing to arrive at an amicable settlement of any disputes, claims or allowances we should be quite willing that the matter should be referred to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, with the proviso that if they be unable to agree they should nominate a third party as their umpire and that the decision of the surveyors or their umpire should be binding on both parties:"

Held, that it was the express intention of the parties that all disputes between them arising out of the contract should be referred to arbitrators for decision.

A failure to pay a claim constitutes a matter in difference between the parties to a submission.

An error in law on the face of an award must be distinctly collected from the face of the award or from some paper so connected with the award as to form part of it.

An award specifying the amount to be paid by one party to the other in pounds sterling but omitting to specify the rate of exchange at which payment is to be made is not bad for uncertainty but may be remitted to the arbitrators for determining the rate of exchange at which payment is to be made. S BEITH STEVENSON & Co., LTD. v. FIRM OF NAROOMAL KHEMCHAND, 17 S. Bengal Alluvion and Diluvion Act (IX of 1847), s. 6—Alluvial increments, whether subject to assessment—Objections—Proper Court—Fundamental irregularity, proof of—Onus—Mahal adjoining river, whether includes alluvial increments.

Alluvial increments are subject to assessment, but the proceedings of the assessing authorities are subject to being quashed in the ordinary Courts of law if they have been tainted by any fundamental irregularity, such as a defiance or non-compliance with the essentials of the procedure.

The burden of establishing such essential and fundamental violation of statutory requirements rests upon the person alleging it.

It is not sufficient to submit in a Court of law that, upon the documents before the Board of Revenue, doubts arise as to whether this, that, or the other detail of investigation should have been set to rest more clearly in the course of the administrative procedure. If such doubts arise upon points of fact, the Board of Revenue is competent to deal with them and is, further, the proper Court before which they should be stated. In order that the doubts should be promptly set at rest, it may have to be on the ground itself. Such is the proper function of an administrative body.

The Board of Revenue is the proper Court to consider all objections as to assessment, etc., and its orders are final.

Bengal Land Revenue Settlement Regulation (VII of 1822), s. 10 (8)—Malguzar, appointment and status of—Bengal Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), ss. 3 (4), 105, 188—Malguzars—Proprietary body—"Agent" in s. 188, whether means only one person—Malguzars, whether can start proceedings under s. 105—Rate of rent mentioned about excess land—Mukarrari holding—Presumption.

The effect of the appointment of Sadar Malguzar is to suspend or take away for the time being the proprietary rights of the proprietors of the estate.

The Sadar Malguzars constitute the entire body of landlords within the meaning of section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act. For the time being the tenants must be held to be holding under the Sadar Malguzars. The right of the other proprietors under the law remains in abeyance so long as the property is managed by the Malguzars under the Regulation.

Malguzars may be considered as agents of the proprietors and as such they are entitled to maintain suits under section 105, Bengal Tenancy Act. The word "Agent" in section 188, Bengal Tenancy Act, includes "Agents." There is no special provision in the Bengal Tenancy Act or any other law which would restrict the meaning of words 'agent' to a single individual.

The mere fact that a certain rate is mentioned in respect of excess land to be found in possession of the tenants does not raise the presumption as to the Mukarrari nature of the holdings. C RAMIJUDDIN v. RAI RADHA KANTA AICH BAHADUR 987

The word "thereafter" in section 115 of the Bengal Tenancy Act refers to a period subsequent to the publication of the Record of Rights, but what is provided is that the presumption under section 50 shall not thereafter, that is to say, after the particulars mentioned in section 102 have been recorded, apply.

Once the Record of Rights has been finally recorded as provided in section 115 of the Act, then the presumption under section 50 is no longer open to the tenants whether they are relying upon a payment of rent at a uniform rate either before or after the publication of the Record of Rights. Pat RAMSARAN MAHTON v. SYED MUHAMMAD ARADUT HUSSAIN 926

A raiyat at a fixed rate is not created by section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, which merely furnishes a rule of evidence to enable a person to prove with facility that he is a raiyat at a fixed rate. Such a raiyat may become a settled raiyat of the village under section 20, and thus acquire a right of occupancy within the meaning of section 21. The status of a tenant at a fixed rate can be combined with that of an occupancy raiyat, the higher status superseding so much of the lower as might be inconsistent with it, and either status might be used as a shield so far as it extends.

An occupancy raiyat is not excluded from the category of a raiyat for the purposes of section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, nor does section 115 debar such a raiyat from the benefit of section 50, as that section only comes into operation when all possible proceedings under Chapter X have been exhausted.

To entitle a raiyat to the benefit of the presumption under section 50 of the Bengal Tenancy Act, what has to be established is not the actual payment of rent, but the fact that the tenancy has been held at a certain rate. Where, therefore, rent receipts for twenty continuous years are not produced, but the discontinuous receipts produced show that rent has been paid at the same rate for the years covered thereby, the Court may, by an application of the principle of continuity infer that there has been no change in the intervening periods. C NARENDRA LAL CHOWDHURY v. BENODE BEHARI SADHUKHAN, 27 C. When a settlement of rent has been made under Part II of Ch. X of the Bengal Tenancy Act, the entry in the Record of Rights is conclusive unless altered by means of a suit instituted under section 104-H of the Act. So, too, are other entries in the Record of Rights upon which the rent is settled so far as they affect the rent settled, i.e., in so far as they bear upon the rent settled, and for that purpose only.

Where, however, the question in controversy is not as to the rent payable but the quantity of the land included in the tenure, the entry in the Record of Rights as to area is not conclusive under section 104-J., although under section 103-B such an entry raises a presumption of correctness. C PRIYA NATH BASU v. TARA CHAND MORAL, 27 C. In the Record of Rights of the parties' village a tank was recorded as within the tenancy of the plaintiffs, but it was also recorded that the defendants were entitled to rear fish in the tank and use its water. Plaintiffs brought a suit for a declaratory decree under the proviso to section 111 A of the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the defendants had no right to rear fish in the tank:

Held, that the entry in the Record of Rights, if allowed to stand would restrict the absolute ownership of the plaintiffs and disentitle them from excluding the defendants from exercising some acts of possession, and that, therefore, the plaintiffs had a cause of action to bring the suit.

Although, strictly speaking, the presumption arising under section 103 B of the Bengal Tenancy Act, is not applicable to an entry relating to non-agricultural land to the extent to which it is applicable with regard to agricultural land, yet such an entry raises some presumption with regard to the fact recorded in it.

The right of one person to rear fish in a tank belonging to another person is a novel right which cannot be recognised by a Court of law. C CHAND MIA MUNSHI v. TUKAMIA, 28 C. W. N. 516; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 667 805

Bill of Lading—Exemption clause—Damage to goods consigned—Suit to recover damages—Perils of the sea, proof of—Onus—Negligence, what constitutes.

In a suit for damages to plaintiff's goods consigned on defendants' schooner on a Bill of Lading containing the usual exemption clause as to "dangers and accidents of the sea and navigation of whatever nature or kind," it is for the defendant to plead and prove "perils of the sea." If he makes out a prima facie case, the plaintiff can rebut it by proving defendant's negligence.

The plaintiffs consigned a number of cases of safety matches by defendant's schooner. Four days later, there was a strong wind and rough weather though not amounting to a storm or cyclone and the steamer was driven away from the place where she anchored. The wind then changed its direction with the result that the schooner swung round and sat on her anchor causing a hole on her port side. The vessel stranded and there was water in the hold. The cases of safety matches were damaged by the sea water. In a suit for damages by the plaintiff against defendant alleging negligence on the part of the master in anchoring in shallow water:

Held, that the facts proved amounted to a peril of the sea and the defendant had not been guilty of negligence;

The mere fact that the accident might have been avoided by greater foresight does not make it negligence. There is no difference between ordinary and extraordinary perils.

The cause need not be extraordinary in the sense that the cause must be uncommon. Although negligence does not save defendants' liability, if reasonable care is taken, the perils of the sea while not including the effect of mere ordinary wear and tear will include the consequences of any kind of accident ending in damages by sea water. M ESUFALI MUHAMMEDBHOY ALLIBHOY v. THAHA UMMAL, 47 M. Under section 23 of the Bombay Mamlatdars' Courts Act, a Collector can set aside an order made by a Mamlatdar only if he considers that it is illegal or improper. The mere fact that the Mamlatdar has entered upon complicated questions does not entitle the Collector to set aside his order. However complicated the questions may appear to be the Mamlatdar is entitled to give possession to one party or the other, and there is nothing improper or illegal in such an order.

When a Revenue authority has clearly exceeded the powers granted under the Act, the High Court should interfere in the ends of justice. B JAGANNATH v. DHONDU, 26 Bom. L. R. 265; 48 B. 384; (1924) A. I. R. (B.) 352 266 brought to sale by the mortgagee, then the mortgagee has a right to institute a suit for the purpose of bringing the property to sale.

Under a possessory mortgage governed by Regulation V of 1827, interest was to be paid on the amount advanced, an account of rents and profits was to be made up after every year, and amount of balance was to be settled by the parties. Even if the mortgagor failed to pass the accounts, he undertook to have the property released after clearing off the total amount of balances struck in each year. It was also argued that if the mortgagor could get the money from any other source for the repayment of the debt, the mortgagee would accept the amount and release the property:

Held, that there was no special agreement between the parties prohibiting a sale of the property under the mortgage.

In the ordinary case of a usufructuary mortgage where the mortgagee is in possession of the mortgaged property either in lieu of interest entirely, or on the terms that he must render an account of rents and profits against interest, the rule of Damdupat would apply. But when the terms of the mortgage have been departed from, and the mortgagor has deprived the mortgagee of possession, then the principle of Damdupat can no longer apply as the relationship of the parties has changed. B NILKANTH BALWANT NATU v. VIDYASHANKAR BHARATI 26 Bom. Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act (II of 1918), s. 9—Tenant remaining in possession after termination of tenancy—Rent payable—Standard rent.

There is nothing in the Bombay Rent (War Restrictions) Act which prevents a landlord from charging his late tenant the standard rent under the Act, as soon as he claims protection under section 9 of the Act because the payment of that rent is the sole condition which the Act recognises as enabling a tenant to remain in possession.

There is no analogy between the provisions of the Act which enable a tenant, who has been charged without his cognizance a higher rent than the standard rent, to recover according to the terms of the Act the excess by deducting it from the current rent, and the ordinary proposition of law that a person in occupation of premises is bound to pay compensation for the use and occupation after the expiration of the contract between him and his landlord, which equally applies to a person who is allowed by the provisions of the Bombay War (Rent Restrictions) Act, to remain in possession. B KALIANMAL TILLOKCHAND v. DHARAMSEY JETHA & Co., 26 Bom. The latter then contracted a second marriage and died some years later:

Held, that the agreement entered into by him with his children before his second marriage was not merely a deed of partnership but amounted to a partition, and the children, therefore, were not entitled to share in any property retained by the father which he took to the second marriage.

Where, after the death of a wife the husband partitions the property with his children and marries again, taking his share with him, on his death the children of his former marriage cannot claim from their stepmother any property which their father took to the second marriage, because they have already obtained their shares on partition. P C MA THAUNG v. MA THAN, (1924) A. Plaintiffs consigned certain goods to a Railway Company for carriage to a certain destination. Owing to a breakdown on the Railway line, the Railway Company made arrangements with the defendant Steamship Company to carry the goods over a portion of the route by water. The ordinary business of the defendant Company was to transport goods over that portion of the route and no special terms were entered into between the Railway Company and the defendant Company. The goods were destroyed by fire while in the custody of the defendant Company. Plaintiffs sued the defendant Company for damages for loss of the goods:

Held, that the defendant Company was liable to the loss as common carriers of the goods.

The word "for all persons indiscriminately" which occur in the definition of "common carrier" in section 2 of the Carriers Act, simply mean that persons so engaged in and catering for business satisfy the demands or applications of customers as they come and are not at liberty to refuse business.

This arises from the public employment in which they are engaged. Apart from danger arising, say, from the nature of the goods received, the carrier is by his office bound to transport the goods as clearly as if there had been a special contract which purported so to bind him, and he is answerable to the owner for safe and sound delivery.

In order to limit the liability of a person who answers the definition of a "common carrier" under the Carriers Act, viz., of transporting for hire goods from place to place for all persons indiscriminately, what is required is that the nature of the contract entered into by him must either have the limitation of his liability under section 6 of the Carriers Act made expressly and in writing, or the facts must be such that for the contract in question the carrier was departing from his usual business and engaging in a different type of business from that of common carrier. P C INDIA GENERAL NAVIGATION AND RY. Article 1 of Schedule II to the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920 applies to dispossession of a tenant by any person whether the landlord or not.

Plaintiff sued to recover possession of a holding alleging that he was an occupancy tenant of the holding and was dispossessed by the defendant in July 1920. The defendant contended that the plaintiff had been out of possession since 1918 and had surrendered his tenancy and that the defendant had been placed in possession by the Malguzar. In the course of the pleadings the plaintiff stated through his Pleader that he had been out of possession since the end of 1918 and that the defendant has not actually dispossessed him but that the suit was filed against defendant as he was in wrongful possession. In reply it was pleaded that the plaintiff not having been in possession of the land within 2 years from the date of the suit, his claim was barred by limitation under Article 1 of Schedule II to the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920. On the date fixed for hearing arguments on the point of limitation the plaintiff applied to amend his pleadings on the ground that he had inadvertently stated that he was dispossessed in 1918 whereas he was dispossessed of 2 fields out of 3 in 1919 and of one field in 1920, and applied to put in copies of jamabandis in support of this:

Held, that as the plaintiff did not in his plaint rely on the jamabandis he could not be allowed to amend his pleadings in order to get out of the effect of his own admission;

(2) that under Article 1 of Schedule II to the C. P. Tenancy Act of 1920, the dispossession need not necessarily be by the landlord and that the plaintiff's suit was clearly barred under that Article. N RAGHUNATH SINGH v. GABDOO 355

Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), ss. 2 (2), 47, O. XXI, r. 66—Sale proclamation—Objection as to misdescription of boundaries—Order, whether final—Test—Appeal, whether competent.

If an order falls within section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code and is a final order, it is a decree within the meaning of the Code and can be challenged by way of appeal.

In order to determine whether an order falls within the terms of section 47 of the Code it is necessary to see whether the order decides a question arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relates to the execution of the decree.

Per Pearson, J.—The determination of a question arising upon an application under O. XXI, r. 66, may also be an order passed under section 47, Civil Procedure Code. The rule of res judicata as stated in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code is not exhaustive: the section does not supersede general principles of law on the subject of res judicata.

The general principle underlying the rule of res judicata is that persons should not be harassed by continuous litigation about the same subject-matter.

Under the rule as laid down in section 11 of the Civil Procedure Code, it is not only the decision of a suit which may constitute res judicata but the decision of an issue alone may operate as such, and it is immaterial that in the subsequent suit the property which is the subject-matter of the dispute is not identical with the property which was in dispute in the previous suit. O GAURI MISRA v. MOHAN, 9 O. & A. In a suit brought under section 92 of the Civil Proceedure Code with the sanction of the Advocate-General the addition of a stranger as defendant does not render the suit bad.

A suit under section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code is brought by the plaintiffs on behalf of themselves and the general public.

The provisions of section 11 of the Code of Civil Procedure are not expressly made applicable to execution proceedings, but the principles are applicable and if a point has been directly or by implication decided in any particular execution proceeding the point cannot be raised subsequently.

When a judgment-debtor on receiving a notice of an application by an assignee from the decree-holder for substitution of his name in the decree, fails to prefer any objection and a definite order of substitution is passed by the Court the judgment-debtor cannot afterwards object to an execution of the decree by the assignee.

Per Mukerjee, J.—It is incumbent on the judgment-debtor under O. On an application for transfer of a decree, it is not only competent to the judgment-debtors but it is incumbent on them, if they propose to rely upon it, to appear and plead that the execution of the decree is barred by limitation.

Where notice of an application for transfer of the decree was issued under Rule 161 (3) of the

Madras Civil Rules of Practice to the judgment-debtor and he had opportunity to appear and plead limitation but he raised no objection and execution was ordered to proceed:

Held, that it was not open to him on a subsequent application for execution to plead that the former application was barred by limitation.

An application by a transferee decree-holder to recognise the transfer and execute the decree is a step-in-aid of execution within the meaning of Art. 182 (5) of the Limitation Act so as to save the bar of limitation of a later execution petition by the decree-holder, notwithstanding the fact that in certain subsequent proceedings the title of the transferee decree-holder on that date is negatived.

Until an assignment of a decree is held to be invalid the transferees are the proper persons who have title to execute the decree.

An attachment before judgment of a decree absolutely prohibiting the execution of the decree by anybody operates as an injunction within the meaning of section 15 of the Limitation Act. A decree-holder is, therefore, entitled to deduct for the purposes of an execution application, the period during which such attachment is in force. M KALLEPALLI RAJILAGIRIPATHY v. KALLEPALLI BHAVANI SANKARAN, 19 L. Where a Court transfers its decree for execution to another Court, the latter Court although clothed with jurisdiction to execute the decree as soon as the Judge orders that the necessary copy of the decree and certificate be filed in Court, will not and cannot execute it unless and until regular application for execution is made to it under O. XXI, rr. 10 and 11, Civil Procedure Code.

In the case of a fraudulent decree the remedy is by way of injunction to restrain the party from executing the decree.

Injunction can be legally claimed and granted in order to restrain the institution of proceedings that is in anticipation.

The right to the relief of injunction to restrain the decree-holder from applying to execute his decree on the ground that it was obtained fraudulently accrues and is enforceable by suit even though the decree-holder defendant has not applied for execution, or the Court has not actually put it into execution.

In cases other than those substantially falling within the scope of suits respecting immoveable property or suits for land, if the cause of action to sue for injunction has wholly or in part arisen within the jurisdiction of any Court that Court has jurisdiction to entertain the suit, under section 20, clause (c) of the Civil Procedure Code. N SULTANALI v. BALAJI 59

Where a decree is transferred to a Court for execution that Court continues to have jurisdiction to execute the decree, until it certifies to the Court that passed the decree, under section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code, that the decree has been executed, or where it fails to execute the same, the circumstances attending such failure.

Where a decree has once been transferred to another Court, certification is a very important step, for its consequence is that the Court to which the decree has been transferred ceases to have jurisdiction to execute the decree. There must, therefore, be a formal certification by the Court to which the decree has been transferred for execution to the Court which passed the decree.

The mere fact that certain payments made under the decree are notified to the Court which passed the decree does not amount to certification within the meaning of section 41 of the Civil Procedure Code. B SHIVLINGAPPA v. SHIDMALLAPPA, 26 Bom. L. R. 345; (1924) A. I. R. (B.) 359 752

A defendant against whom the claim is not dismissed but whose name is struck off from the record at the plaintiff's own instance is not and cannot be regarded as a party to the suit or the decree within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, as there is no formal expression of an adjudication which, so far as he is concerned, conclusively determines the rights of the parties with regard to all or any of the matters in controversy in the suit. N KANHAIYALAL KALAR v. LACHHI 470

An Executing Court, which entrusts to a party to the decree or to a third person as a depository or sapratdar property taken by it under attachment or in execution of its process, has, either acting on its own motion or at the instance of a party to the decree, power

(1) to order him to produce it for sale if necessary, or even to return it to the judgment-debtor or to the objector or any other person from whose possession it was attached or taken, upon the decree being satisfied or objection being allowed or upon the termination of any proceeding in execution, or for any cause whatever, and also if necessary;

(2) to visit him with any penalty for his default in obeying its orders by proceeding against him in a summary manner, in order to prevent the abuse of its own process and for shortening the litigation or for the ends of justice.

The mere fact that the decree-holder becomes a depositary of the property taken in execution of a decree does not make him a stranger to the decree so as to prevent the Court from exercising its jurisdiction over him.

Section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code gives ample jurisdiction to a Court to pass orders for the restoration of or for the proclamation of the withdrawal of attachment of moveable property also.

The word 'decree' in section 141 of the Civil Procedure Code covers on 'order' and the word 'Court' includes Courts of every grade.

Section 244 of the Civil Procedure Code corresponding to section 47 of the new Civil Procedure Code is meant to provide "a cheap and expeditious remedy" by empowering the Court executing a decree to determine questions that may arise in execution proceedings, without requiring the parties to bring a separate suit in respect of any questions that may arise between them in such proceedings.

Bona fide purchaser, who is—Decree set aside by suit, effect of.

The language of clause (1) of section 144 of the Civil Procedure Code is wider than that of the corresponding section 583 of the Code of 1882 and the addition of clause (2) barring suits necessarily implies the widest possible construction of clause (1).

The question of restitution of property sold under a decree, is restricted not merely to the parties themselves but also extends to their representatives within the meaning of section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code, and the term 'representatives' includes not merely legal representatives, but also assignees.

While as against a decree-holder who is himself the auction-purchaser, a sale can be set aside and restitution made an innocent purchaser through Court cannot be so disturbed.

By the phrase "bona fide or innocent purchaser" as distinguished from the case where the decree-holder is himself the auction-purchaser, the Courts imply the test of knowledge of the pending proceedings whether by appeal or otherwise to set aside a decree, and opportunity to defend his own interests in those proceedings.

The fact that the decree which was executed by sale was set aside, not in appeal, but by subsequent litigation, does not affect the question of restitution. S JAMNOMAL GURDINOMAL v. GOPALDAS, 17 S. L. R. 73; (1924) A. I. R. (S.) 101 1002

In a case where notice under O. XXI, r. 22 of the Civil Procedure Code has not been issued and the omission is due not to the fact that sub-rule (2) of the rule has been applied, but to the fact that notice was not asked for a sale held in execution is void and not merely voidable as against the person to whom notice should have been but was not issued.

Where a sale in execution of a decree is void as against a party and he applies for relief under section 47 of the Civil Procedure Code or otherwise, the case is governed by Article 181 and not by Article 166 of Schedule I to the Limitation Act.

The effect of the judgment in a suit brought in accordance with O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, is to supersede the order passed upon a claim made under r. 58 and to render it inconclusive.

A suit under O. XXI, r. 63, Civil Procedure Code, is a continuation of claim proceedings. It is a suit to set aside the order passed upon the claim and is merely a form of appeal in the guise of an original suit.

A private transfer of the attached property, after the date of its release, at the instance of a claimant or objector, is bad on the ground of lis pendens, and does not affect the right of the party in whose favour the suit may be decided.

An order of release under O. XXI, r. 60, Civil Procedure Code, is not final but provisional, and although it operates to prevent the attaching creditor from proceeding to sell the attached property it does not operate so as at once to remove the attachment and leave the judgment-debtors free to deal with the property as they like. If they do deal with it, they and those with whom they deal, do so subject to the result of the suit as to the attachment being maintained.

Ordinarily, for a decree-holder to execute his decree for money two things are at least essential. Either the person or the property of the judgment-debtor must be made available against which the execution could issue; if his property be not available, at least the arrest of his person must be possible.

Conduct is the best proof of intention.

Under section 48, Civil Procedure Code, the word "fraud," is used in a much wider sense than that in which it is generally used in Englisn Law. Locking up the house so as to prevent attachment of moveable property; or evading arrest by any contrivance; or dishonestly evading payment by eluding service of warrant, is a fraud within the meaning of the section. Similarly, a fictitious transfer of property made by a judgment-debtor to defeat or delay the execution of a decree, that may be passed against him amounts to fraud within the meaning of the section.

Fraud on the part of a judgment-debtor at any stage of the execution gives a new starting point for the period of limitation. Therefore, a judgment-debtor's continued absence from the jurisdiction of the Executing Court is a continuing fraud, and keeps the right of the decree-holder to apply for execution alive, from day to day during his period of absence from the jurisdiction of the Court.

If an Executing Court holds rightly or wrongly that a decree is executable, even after the twelve years have elapsed, and orders execution to issue and the judgment-debtor does not challenge the order by way of appeal, review or revision, the order is binding on him and on principles analogous to those of res judicata strictly so-called, he is precluded from challenging the order at a subsequent stage of execution proceedings. N KHAIRULLA v DHANRUPMAL 905

The jurisdiction of a Court in entertaining an application for rateable distribution of the assets under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, depends on the sine qua non of its being made before the receipt of such assets.

A Court in receiving and disposing of an application under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, in defiance of the conditions on the existence of which the jurisdiction rests, exercises its jurisdiction with material irregularity and its order is open to revision.

Where a decree-holder himself is the purchaser and claims a set-off against the price of property purchased which is allowed by the Court, no application for rateable distribution under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, can be entertained after the termination of the sale. The Court in such a case obtains constructive seisin over the purchase-money immediately after the conclusion of the sale and the order allowing set-off under O. XXI, r. 72 of the Code is not equivalent to receipt of the assets but a mere disposal thereof

Obiter: In a case where an application for set-off is made and there are no obstacles to the granting of it, e. g, absence of an application under section 73, Civil Procedure Code, it is doubtful whether there can ever be a 'receipt of assets' by Court within the meaning of section 73, Civil Procedure Code. O MOHAN LAL v. AMAR NATH 40

There may be mortgage or hypothecation of movable properties. Such hypothecation or mortgage not accompanied by possession confers a good title upon the person in whose favour it is made and the law recognises the transaction as security and equity gives effect to it.

The words 'any property' used in clauses (a) and (b) of the proviso to section 73 of the Civil Procedure Code as contradistinguished from the words "immoveable property" in clause (c) tend to show that hypothecations of moveables were intended to be included therein. Where an interpretation clause gives an extended meaning to a word, it does not follow as a matter of course that if that word is used more than once in the Act it is on each occasion used in the extended meaning, and it may be always a matter for argument whether or not the interpretation clause is to apply to the word as used in the particular clause of the Act which is under consideration.

Civil Procedure Code—1908—contd.

The extended meaning given to the expression "railway administration" by the words "and includes the Government" in section 3 (6) of the Railways Act, does not apply appropriately in all cases where that expression occurs in the Act, but, it can be availed of when the subject or context shows this is legitimate, as in the case of suits falling under Chapter VII of the Act.

The Railways Act contains no clear indication that a suit against a State Railway can be brought against the Manager, and on the contrary, the definition of "railway administration," in the case of a railway administered by the Government, as including the Government, suggests that a suit like this should be brought against the Government.

By virtue of the provisions contained in section 79 (1) of the Civil Procedure Code and section 32 (2) of the Government of India Act, the Secretary of State for India is the real and proper defendant in a suit against a State Railway. B SUKHANAND SHAMLAL v. OUDH AND ROHILKHAND RAILWAY, 26 Bom. For a suit against a public officer notice under section 80 of the Civil Procedure Code is equally necessary whether the act complained of was not in good or bad faith.

The section does not require that the act should have been done in good faith; it merely requires that it should purport to be done by the officer in his official capacity. If the act was one such as is ordinarily done by the officer in the course of his official duties, and he considered himself to be acting as a public officer and desired other persons to consider that he was so acting, the act clearly purports to be done in his official capcaity within the ordinary meaning of the term "purport." The motives with which the act was done do not enter into the question at all.

Findings of fact must be accepted in second appeal unless it can be said that there was no evidence to support them or that they are based on some error of law.

The fact that a decided case was distinguished in a judgment in a subsequent case does not show that it was accepted as good law. If a case is distinguished it is unnecessary to express any opinion as to its correctness, and it is notorious that cases are sometimes distinguished on very slender grounds to avoid the responsibility of appearing to overrule them. A ABDUL RAHIM v. ABDUL RAHMAN, 22 A. To make section 92 of the Civil Procedure Code applicable it is not necessary that the existence of the trust for public, charitable or religious purposes alleged by the plaintiff should be admitted by the defendant and a suit under that section is maintainable for declaratory relief, where the trustee not only mismanages the trust property but sets up a title adverse to the trust.

Under section 122 of the Transfer of Property Act to constitute a valid gift, there must be a voluntary giving by the donor and an acceptance by the donee. What constitutes acceptance depends upon the circumstances of each case.

In the case of the donee, being incapable of signifying his acceptance by reason of age or of his being an impersonal being recognized by law as capable of being a donee, such as deity, the acceptance required by the section may be done on his behalf by somebody else competent to act as an agent. The acceptance may again be signified by an overt act such as the actual taking possession of the property, or such act by the donee as would in law amount to taking possession of the property where the property is not capable of physical possession. Thus actual delivery of possession is not essential in all cases, for it is only one of the modes of indicating acceptance.

A registered deed of gift cannot take the place of those essentials among which is the complete divesting of the ownership by the donor. Therefore, it must be proved in each case, apart from the registration of the document, that there was a complete divesting of the ownership. A registered deed of gift, as any other such document, may be merely a nominal transaction, without any intention on the part of the executant to give effect to the terms falsely or fictitiously set forth in the document.

The Transfer of Property Act lays down general provisions governing gifts and dedications and there is no distinction in principle between the essential ingredients requisite for a valid gift or dedication in Hindu Law and those laid down by the Act.

The essential ingredient that constitutes gift of moveable or immoveable propert in the Hindu Law whether in favour of a deity or a human being is the Sankalp and the Samarpan whereby the property is given completely away and the owner completely divests himself of the ownership in it. Pat DEO SARAN BHARTHI v. DEOKI BHARTHI, 5 P. The principle is that ordinarily an interlocutory order is not capable of revision, particularly when there is another remedy available to the injured party but where the order complained against is such as is calculated to cause irreparable loss to the injured party and there is no right of appeal and no remedy available to the party an interlocutory order may be revised under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code read with section 15 of the Charter Act. (Section 107 of the Government of India Act).

An order demanding an improper Court-fee involving jurisdiction of the Court to try or not to try the suit, though an interlocutory order fulfils the test referred to above and will attract the revisional jurisdiction of the Court under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code and section 107 of the Government of India Act, the decision of matters relating to Court-fees will be decision of a "case" within the meaning of the word in section 115 of the Code.

The Court has a right to determine an issue rightly or wrongly and a wrong decision in itself will not attract the revisional jurisdiction of this Court: if on account of its wrong decision the Court refuses to exercise a jurisdiction vested in by law or exercise a jurisdiction not vested in law, the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court will come in. Thus if the Court wrongly decides the issue as to Court-fee holding that the suit comes under a particular clause of the Court Fees Act and asks the plaintiff to pay additional Court-fee before his suit can be entertained and the real issues can be tried, the Court refuses to try the case and exercise its jurisdiction unless the proper Court-fee is paid. Such an order will be capable of revision.

Plaintiffs sued to recover possession of the estate of one C upon the deed of his widow K on the ground that they were the nearest reversionary heirs of C. They paid Court-fee on ten times the Government revenue under section 7, clause (v) of the Court Fees Act, but the Court ordered payment of ad valorem Court-fees under clause (iv) on Rs. 5,200 the valuation put by the plaintiffs. The additional Court-fee was paid. Subsequently the Court assessed the value of the properties at Rs. 19,060 and fixing the value of the suit at that sum ordered the plaintiffs to pay the deficit Court-fee within 3 weeks. The plaintiffs thereupon put in an application for review of this order but the Court rejected this application. The plaintiffs filed a petition of revision in the High Court :

Held (1) that, the fact that the plaintiffs paid a small sum demanded by the Court in the first instance did not preclude them from disputing the subsequent decision of the Court demanding a very high sum on the ground that ad valorem Court-fee was payable under section 7 clause (iv) of the Act ;

(2) that the Court was competent to review its order and was wrong in holding that the application for review was not maintainable so long as the first order demanding ad valorem Court-fee was not sought to be reviewed;

(3) that the High Court could interfere in revision with the order demanding additional Court-fees;

(4) that, however, the suit fell under s. 7, clause (iv) and not clause (v) of the Court Fees Act, and ad valorem Court-fees were payable. Pat MANI LAL v. DURGA PRASAD, 5 P. L. T. 425; (1924) Pat 254; 3 Pat. 930 667

Where a Court has jurisdiction to determine a question and it determines that question, it cannot be said to have acted illegally or with material irregularity, in the exercise of its jurisdiction, within the meaning of section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code merely because it has come to an erroneous decision. Where, in a suit against a Railway Company, for damages for loss of goods, a Court erroneously holds that notice under section 77 of the Railways Act was unnecessary on the facts of the case, it cannot be said that it assumes jurisdiction which had not been vested in it by law, and the decision is not, therefore, open to revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code. C EAST INDIAN RY. Under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code the High Court is not confined to an enquiry as to the jurisdiction exercised by the lower Appellate Court above. The section gives the High Court power to enquire whether the Court of first instance has failed to exercise jurisdiction or not.

Plaintiff sued for possession of half share in a house either by partition or by a decree for joint possession. The defendant had purchased the house for Rs. 215 at Court auction sale, and the suit was valued by the plaintiffs at Rs. 300 for the purposes of jurisdiction. Defendant contended that he had pulled down the house purchased by him and had built a pucca house of considerable value on the land and that if any decree for possession was passed in favour of the plaintiff, compensation must be given to the defendant. It was discovered that the value of the house built by the defendant was over Rs. 2,000 :

Held, (1) that the house built by the defendant was not part of the subject-matter of the suit within the meaning of section 17 of the Oudh Civil Courts Act, but that the subject-matter of the suit was the value of a half share in the house as it stood at the time of the defendant's purchase ;

(2) that, therefore, the suit had not been undervalued by the plaintiff. O ABDULLA v. MAHAMMAD NAZIR, 10 O. & A. L. R 19 694

He then applied to amplify and amend the plaint by stating that he was a minor on the date of the sale. The amendment was disallowed as not coming under O. Held, (1) that the amendment was not such a variation of the original cause of action as to preclude permission to amend under O. VI, r. 17 of the Civil Procedure Code;

(2) that the refusal by the Court to exercise its lawful power so as to deprive the plaintiff of what appeared to be a vital plea amounted to material irregularity and would justify interference in revision under section 115 of the Civil Procedure Code.

If on the date of the hearing of a suit, the plaintiff does not appear and his Pleader has no instructions to conduct the suit, then there is no reason for the Court to raise issues or, if they have been already raised, to find on them. The suit must be dismissed under O. IX, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. In such a case the aggrieved party can apply for a review of the order or apply for an order to set aside the order of dismissal. The fact that the Court erroneously finds on the issues and rejects the claim does not entitle the aggrieved party to move the High Court in revision. B PANDURANG VEDURAM v. MOHAN CHHATRABHUJ, (1923) A. The privilege of inspection by a party of his adversary's documents is not a matter of routine, but is to be permitted or refused only after a judicial decision not only as to the right to inspection itself, but with reference also to the stage of the case at which such right is to be permitted, and it is to be exercised so as to result in as little harm as possible to parties who are entitled to have the protection of the Court in carrying on their lawful pursuits.

When a party has produced in Court under O. XI, r. 14, Civil Procedure Code, documents in his possession but has urged that inspection should not be allowed before hearing his objections, the Court has no right to ignore that protest and the other party has no legal right to inspect all documents relating to all issues and to all stages of the trial of the suit, i. e., the mere production by one party does not give an immediate and indefeasible right of inspection to the other.

Interference in revision by the High Court with the proceedings of a lower Court during the pendency of a suit is to be deprecated unless strong reasons are made good. ——— ss. 151, 152, scope of—Amendment of judgment—Accidental mistake—Fraud—Inherent power.

An amendment of a judgment cannot be allowed under section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code merely on the ground of mistake. The error must be a natural consequence of an accidental slip or omission. Where the error is due to a deliberate wrong statement in the plaint, the section cannot be invoked for the purpose of correcting it, unless third parties have acquired rights under the erroneous judgment in the interval.

Under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code however, the Court can correct the judgment even if the mistake was due to fraud and was not accidental, as under that section it has the inherent power to act ex debito justitiæ and to that real and substantial justice for the administration of which alone it exists. When it is discovered that a decree does not agree with the judgment it is the duty of the Court to amend the decree so as to bring it into conformity with the judgment.

The power of the Court to amend the decree is not confined to the provisions of O. XX, r. 6 or to section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code for it is a matter within the inherent jurisdiction of the Court and it may be exercised under section 151 of the case which does not restrict the illimitable inherent jurisdiction of the Court.

The word "may" in section 152 of the Civil Procedure Code does not make it discretionary with the Court to order the correction but merely enlarges the power of the Court by proving that such correction can be done 'at any time.'

The only exception to the general rule as to correction of decree is that the Court will refuse to make the amendment where it offends against the principles of equity. C CHANDRA KUMAR MUKHOPADHYA v. SUDHANSU BADANI DIN, 28 C. W. N. 873 55

Where, before an auction sale is confirmed the judgment-debtor and the auction-purchaser arrive at an arrangement where by the decree-holder is paid off and the parties agree in applying to the Court that the sale should be set aside, the Court has inherent jurisdiction to set aside the sale under section 151 of the Civil Procedure Code, notwithstanding that the procedure prescribed in r. 89 of O. The power conferred by O. VII, r. 11 of the Civil Procedure Code should be exercised with great circumspection and only if the Court is satisfied that even if the plaintiff proves all the allegations of fact he sets forth in the plaint, he would still not be entitled to any relief whatever.

The rule does not justify the rejection of a plaint in part. Where the onus of establishing a positive or negative allegation lies upon the plaintiff the Court will order the defendant to give particulars of his traverse of that allegation.

In a suit to recover damages for wrongful dismissal of the plaintiff by the directors of the defendant Company in the alleged exercise by them of the powers conferred on them by the agreement of service entered into by the plaintiff, the plaintiff cannot call upon the defendant for a statement of particulars of the reasons why the directors considered the plaintiff unsuitable, or adduce evidence to show that these reasons were wrong or insufficient and cannot ask the Court to substitute itself for the directors to decide how far these reasons were good, bad or indifferent. All that he can ask the Court in cases of this character is whether the action of the directors was an honest and bona fide exercise of their powers under the agreement. S COLLINS v. CHARLES BOOTH & CO., LTD., 17 S. The term 'cause of action' means every fact which it would be necessary for the plaintiff to prove, if traversed, in order to support his right to the judgment of the Court. It does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved. It has no relation whatever to the defence which may be set up by the defendant, nor does it depend upon the character of the relief prayed for by the plaintiff. It refers entirely to the grounds set forth in the plaint as the cause of action, or in the other words, to the media upon which the plaintiff asks the Court to arrive at a conclusion in his favour.

Defendant obtained a decree on a mortgage executed by a Hindu. The minor sons of the latter brought a suit for partition of the family properties free from the mortgage on the ground that the mortgage was not for necessity, but was executed for immoral purposes personal to the mortgagor. The suit was dismissed under O. IX, r. 8 of the Civil Procedure Code. Defendant then applied for sale of the mortgaged property in execution of his decree. The sons of the mortgagor then brought the present suit for an injunction restraining the defendant from selling the property in execution of his decree. The suit was based on the same allegations on which the previous suit was based:

Held, that the second suit was barred under O. IX, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code, as the cause of action in both suits was the same.

Where a party is absent when a suit is called on for hearing but he appears in Court before the Court has risen for the day, then the Court should listen to his application for having his suit restored. If the opponent has left the Court then the opponent should have notice, but if the opponent is present in Court, then it is the duty of the Judge to dispose of the application at once. The mere fact that a party or his Pleader has arrived in Court after the proper hour when the suit has been disposed of ex parte, is no reason whatever why the suit should not be restored to the board and the case heard on its merits, the Court imposing such conditions on the defaulting party as might meet the justice of the case. If the latter reply on affidavit that the documents of which inspection is sought are not in their power or possession, that affidavit is conclusive and the Court cannot go behind it, unless there is something like an answer in cross-examination or some other documentary evidence showing conclusively, that the documents are in the power or possession of the party. One M executed a deed of trust in respect of certain properties and conveyed the properties to a trustee. He also assigned to the trustee his right to recover arrears of rent of the properties. The trustee brought suits against the tenants of the trust properties for rent and obtained decrees for rent in respect of period prior and subsequent to the execution of the deed of trust. It was then discovered that the object of the trust could not be carried out and steps were taken to obtain a declaration that the trust was invalid. M again obtained possession of the properties and sought to execute the rent decrees obtained by the trustee:

Held, (1) that the trust having failed, the properties and their accessories, viz., the rents and profits including the decrees in question must be held to have reverted to the original owner who was competent to execute the decrees without any express assignment from the trustee;

A simple hypothecation bond is "moveable property," not only for the purposes of attachment but also for the purposes of sale and O. XXI, r. 89 has no application. In other words, the bond is "moveable property" for all three purposes, attachment, sale and setting aside the sale under O. XXI, r. 89.

A simple mortgage-bond carries with it two rights; a right to a decree for money and to a decree for sale. The latter gives the mortgagee a right to be recouped from the sale-proceeds but gives absolutely no right of any sort to or in the land. He has not even a right to all the sale-proceeds but to only so much as may be necessary to meet his debt. In other words, a debt due on a simple mortgage is a debt though it is secured on land; the security is merely collateral. In short, a simple hypothecation bond does not create "an interest in immoveable property."

In the absence of a clear intention to the contrary, what is held to be 'moveable property' at the time of the attachment may reasonably be considered to continue to be 'moveable' at the time of the sale. Even assuming that a simple hypothecation bond creates an interest in 'immoveable property' and as such is 'immoveable property' itself, there is a clear indication of the intention of the Legislature that for the purposes of the Code of Civil Procedure it should be treated as 'moveable property.'

In the definition of "immoveable property," in section 3 (25), General Clauses Act, the expression "benefits to arise out of land" was never intended to cover such a matter as the security held by the mortgagee under a simple mortgage-bond. A LAL UMRAO SINGH v. LAL SINGH, 22 A. A preliminary mortgage-decree was passed on 27th November 1918. That morning, before the decree was passed, the judgment-debtor died. The plaintiff came to know of it soon after, but no steps were taken to bring the legal representatives of the deceased on the record till 27th August 1920 when plaintiff filed an application under O. XXXIV, r. 5 of the Civil Procedure Code wherein he set out the fact that the judgment-debtor had died, entered his widow as defendant and asked for a final decree to be passed. The widow contended that the preliminary decree having been passed after the judgment-debtor's death was a nullity and that in the absence of any petition to bring the legal representatives of the deceased on the record the suit had abated. Nearly seven months thereafter, the plaintiff filed another application asking that the delay in bringing the legal representatives of the deceased on the record be excused and that a final decree may be passed. The Court of first instance dismissed both petitions by two separate orders. An appeal was filed only against the order on the first petition and the Appellate Court treating the first application as one to set aside the abatement, excused the delay in filing it, allowed it and directed the suit to be proceeded with. On appeal:

Held, (1) that the judgment-debtor having died before the decree, the decree was a nullity and no legal representative having been brought on the record within the time prescribed by law, the suit had abated;

(2) that the order of the lower Appellate Court in setting aside the abatement was without jurisdiction, first, because it had before it no prayer to set aside the abatement and no substantial motion under O. XXII, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code and secondly, because it had no jurisdiction to revise the order on the second application which was not properly before it;

(3) that the order of the lower Appellate Court though technically one under O. XXII, r. 9 of the Civil Procedure Code and consequently not appealable under that order, was passed without jurisdiction and was, therefore, appealable, or at least open to revision on the ground that it was without jurisdiction.

Where it is necessary, in order to do substantial justice, to brush aside technicalities, the Court will not be too scrupulous in enforcing them; but when there are no merits in favour of the party invoking the aid of the Court and the merits are on the other side, the Court will not goout of its way to clear from the former's path technical obstacles. M SESHAMMA v. YEERANKI PEDA VENKATA RAO, 34 M. accepted in part—Order refusing to record compromise followed by decree—Appeal, whether lies.

Under O. XXIII, r. 3, Civil Procedure Code, a Court is bound to record a compromise and to pass a decree in accordance therewith so far as it relates to the suit if it is proved to its satisfaction that a suit has been adjusted wholly or in part by a lawful agreement or compromise. Under O. XLIII, r. 1 (m), Civil Procedure Code, an appeal is competent from an order under r. 3 of O. XXIII, recording or refusing to record an agreement, compromise or satisfaction. The mere fact that an order recording a compromise or refusing to record a compromise has been followed by a decree does not deprive a party of his statutory right to prefer an appeal against such order.

A compromise should either be accepted as a whole or rejected altogether. It cannot be accepted in part and rejected in part.

It does not entitle the Judge to put his view obtained by means of such inspection in place of evidence.

The rule of English practice which prevents a minor from instituting a suit in forma pauperis through his next friend, unless he gives proof not only that he himself is a pauper, but that the next friend is also a pauper cannot be deduced from the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code. Under the Civil Procedure Code when a minor is seeking to file a suit in forma pauperis it is only necessary for him to show that he himself has no means. The mere fact that his parents were possessed of certain property would not be sufficient to show that the minor is not a pauper, unless it could be shown that the property actually came into his possession. B NEMICHAND v. KENALCHAND, 26 Bom. XXXIV, rr. 7 (c), 8 (4)—Redemption decree—Parties taking no steps in pursuance of decree—Mortgagor dispossessing mortgagee forcibly—Mortgagee suing for possession—Parties entitled to be restored to their position on passing of decree—Duties and rights of mortgagor and mortgagee—Limitation Act (IX of 1908), Sch. I, Art. 181, when applicable.

If after the passing of a redemption decree in the terms of O. XXXIV, r. 7 of the Civil Procedure Code, neither the mortgagor pays the amount of the mortgage money within the period fixed by the decree, nor does the mortgagee apply for sale on the expiry of the said period, and then the mortgagor dispossesses the mortgagee forcibly; on the latter's suit for possession the parties are entitled to be restored to the same position in which they were on the passing of the redemption decree, and it is open to them to work out the decree in terms of its directions, if there is no legal bar to this.

A mortgagor can save the sale of the mortgaged property at any time before the sale is confirmed, inasmuch as a payment by him is not barred either by the lapse of the period prescribed in the redemption decree or by Article 181 of the Limitation Act.

The expiry of period fixed by decree, without payment of the decretal amount, gives to the mortgagee a right to apply to the Court under sub-r. (4), r. 8 of O. XXXIV for a decree that the mortgaged property be sold. It does not take away the mortgagor's right to redeem, which subsists in his favour even after sale under r. 89 of O. XXI of the Code of Civil Procedure.

Article 181 would only apply to an application where it is required by law to be made. The mortgagor is not required by any rule of procedure to make an application and obtain an order thereon before he can pay the amount fixed by the decree for redemption of the mortgage. It is the mortgagee who is required by law to make an application, under O. XXXIV, r. 8 (4), for obtaining a decree for the sale of the mortgaged property. O MOHAMMAD BAQAR KHAN v. JAGAT NARAIN LAL, 10 O. & A. L. R. 1149 706 whether can be delegated—Misconduct, whether can be enquired into—Reference, whether can be recalled.

Under the Second Schedule of the Civil Procedure Code the only time for entertaining charges of misconduct against an arbitrator is when the award has been filed.

It is very much better that no interference should take place with the arbitration proceedings during the period limited to the arbitrators.

The limit of time is the condition or the form of the Court's control over the arbitrators, and the Court is not authorised either to abandon control or to substitute any other form of control.

It is necessary that the Court should inform its own limit upon the arbitrators.

It is not competent to the Court to delegate to the arbitrators its own function of control as to time.

Matters in dispute between the parties were referred to the arbitrators under the Second Schedule to the Code. The order provided that the arbitrators should make their award in writing within six months from the date on which an office-copy of the order of reference be served on them or within such further time as they may allow themselves by endorsement of the said office-copy order. The arbitrators held many sittings during the course of two years, but nothing was decided. The plaintiff then applied that the reference should be recalled or superseded:

Held, that the order of the Court allowing the arbitrators to extend the time fixed for filing the award did not comply with the provisions of clause (3) of the Second Schedule to the Code and was consequently bad in law;

(2) that by consenting to the order of reference the plaintiff was not estopped from making the application and the reference must be superseded. C ROBINDRA v. JOGENDRA, 27 C. W. N. 420; (1923) A. I. R. (C.) 410 459

The plaintiff urged in appeal that the statement of G. was not binding and that the Court should have decided the case on the merits:

Held, (1) that the agreement operated as an adjustment of the suit and was binding on the parties;

(2) that at any rate the statement of G. must be taken to be an admission made in the suit by a nominee of a party thereto, which was as effectual and conclusive as an admission made by the party himself in his written or oral pleadings. A HIMANCHAL SINGH v. JATWAR SINGH, (1924) A. The defendant contracted to buiid a house for the plaintiff within one year. The plaintiff undertook to advance small sums of money to the defendant and the latter agreed to allow a rebate or deduction of 10 per cent. in favour of the plaintiff on the scheduled rates of articles to be supplied by him. If the work was done honestly and well it was left to the kindness of the plaintiff to allow something to the defendant from this commission. As the work commenced the plaintiff began to order changes in the construction almost doubling the size of the building. Disputes arose between the parties, the plaintiff declined to make further advances and the work was stopped. Thereupon the plaintiff brought a suit to recover his commission. It was found that the work done was well worth the full scheduled rates:

Held, (1) that the arrangement by way of rebate or 10 per cent. commission in favour of plaintiff was an arrangement that was only exigible and became crystallised when the work was completed;

(2) that a fortiori this deduction was never agreed to in respect of the additions ordered in the original building;

(3) that as the work was not completed and the defendant was in no way to blame and there was no injustice done to the plaintiff the latter was not entitled to recover anything. P C SAHU RAM KUMAR v. MUHAMMAD YAKUB, (1924) A. Held, that the clause conferred no right of pre-emption on the occasion of the foreclosure of a mortgage by conditional sale apart from the right conferred on the occasion of the creation of the mortgage itself.

Any ruling as to the interpretation of a document can only be applied in its entirety to a document absolutely identical in language, and in a case the general circumstances of which are substantially the same. Where these conditions are not satisfied, an appellant, or a respondent, relying upon previous rulings of the Court and putting them forward as guides to the correct interpretation of the particular document on which the case under appeal actually turns, can do nothing more than ask the Court to take into consideration the general principles which have been applied by other Hon'ble Judges in similar cases and to derive from them whatever assistance it can towards arriving at a correct conclusion. A ALKHU RAI v. LACHHMAN UPADHIA, 22 A. ——— s. 13 —Champerty, whether illegal—Money lent to finance suit for recovery of property—Suit, compromise of—Lender, whether can recover money lent—Breach of contract, effect of.

In India, champerty or maintenance is not illegal.

There is no distinction, and can be no distinction on this point between the fruits of an action which the plaintiff gets by compromise and the fruits he would receive by a decree or verdict in his favour.

Defendants entered into a contract with the predecessor-in-title of the plaintiff the Raja of Tuni whereby it was agreed that the Raja would lend money to the defendants in order to finance his suit for the recovery of an expectancy. The material provisions of this contract were (1) that the suit would not be compromised without the consent of the Raja, (2) that if the Counsel conducting the case advised a compromise it would be entered into, and (3) that out of the moveable and immoveable properties obtained by such compromise the defendant would repay the principal money advanced together with interest at one per cent. per mensem and that out of the properties that remained after making this payment defendant would execute and give the Raja a proper sale-deed and place in his possession three-thirty seconds of a share.

The Rajah died and the suit was compromised after his death. His widow then brought a suit claiming that the money due to the Raja should be a charge upon the amount received by the defendant under the compromise:

Held, (1) that the contract entered into by the defendant, was an agreement to assign to the Rajah part of the fruits that he may acquire in an action at law, and was, therefore, perfectly legal;

(2) that the words used in this contract were wide enough to cover every conceivable kind of property;

(3) that the main purpose and object of the contract was to finance a suit brought to establish title to an existing thing, i.e., an estate;

(4) that the stipulation with regard to the consent of the Rajah must be deemed to contain a term to the effect that the consent should be given when possible and that the giving of the consent by the Rajah to a compromise accepted by his representatives was not such a condition precedent when it had become impossible for himself to give it. P. ——— s. 13—Consent — Signing of document —Document signed by blind man—Misrepresentation of contents of document — Non-est factum, plea of—Bona fide purchaser for value, position of.

The mere signing of a document does not necessarily imply consent. Thus if a blind man, or a man who cannot read, has a written contract falsely read over to him, the reader misreading to such an extent that the written contract is of a nature altogether different from the contract pretended to be read from the paper which the blind or illiterate man afterwards signs, or if the contents of the document are otherwise misrepresented to the person signing it, then the plea of non-est factum is available to him and the signature so obtained is of no force.

The rule does not apply to a man who can read but who forbears to read the document. But the question is important only when it is raised between two innocent parties, for unless the document is wholly void, as it would be if the plea of non-est factum succeeds, an innocent party giving consideration cannot be deprived of an interest which he has taken under the deed; but where the question arises between a party deceiving and a party deceived it is immaterial whether the deed is void or voidable; and, even if the party deceived fails in his plea of non-est factum, that is to say, that there was no consent on his part within the meaning of the term as defined in the Contract Act, it is still open to him to prove that there was a mis-representation and to ask the Court to relieve him from the consequences of the transaction. Pat HEM SINGH v. BHAGWAT SINGH 67

I, Art. 114, application of.*

If a mortgagor agrees to receive a less amount than that for which he agrees to execute a mortgage the transaction is perfectly valid.

The mere fact that the borrower has urgent need of money does not place the lender in a position to dominate the will of the borrower.

Under section 16 (3) of the Contract Act the burden of proving the absence of undue influence can lie on a defendant only in the event of the plaintiff discharging the initial onus of satisfying the Court that the defendant directly or indirectly was in a position to dominate the will of the plaintiff.

The maxim "once a mortgage always a mortgage" is one of equity and is not displaced by anything contained in the Transfer of Property Act.

If the substance of a transaction is a mortgage and nothing more than a mortgage it must not be made irredeemable and any covenant which clogs the equity of redemption is void.

Such of the rules of English Law as are not either technical in their origin or peculiar to the customs, traditions and habits of the people of England are invariably followed in India as rules of justice, equity and good conscience.

The object of section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act is to legalise the equitable right to redeem and permit redemption even when the right is expressly abandoned or even postponed by the contract of mortgage which is the subject-matter of a suit for redemption.

The question as to when a mortgagor is entitled to redeem must be answered with reference to the terms of the contract of mortgage as a whole, other relevant circumstances, and the rules of law and equity, applicable to the particular case.

When a suit is brought under a contract but one of its terms is challenged as being void in law the three years' rule of limitation does not apply.

Plaintiff sued to redeem a usufructuary mortgage executed by him in favour of the defendant. The deed provided, inter alia, that the balance of the realization by the mortgagee after deduction of the Government revenue was to be appropriated for the interest, the deficiency to be paid year by year by the mortgagor and in the event of default the mortgagee to be entitled to compound interest at the contractual rate. It further provided that the mortgagor shall have no right of redemption for 50 years after which period redemption would take place in payment of principal, interest and compound interest due. It appeared that the net profits of the mortgaged property were about Rs. 275 and the interest amounted to Rs. 720 thus leaving a deficit of Rs. 445 payable by the mortgagor to the mortgagee every year:

Held, (1) that the combined effect of the covenant postponing redemption for 50 years and other covenants and the circumstances entailing a perpetual deficiency of profits to the extent of Rs. 445 a year was to render the mortgage in question irredeemable;

(2) that the covenant was repugnant to or inconsistent with the contractual right to redeem;

(3) that the plaintiff was entitled to redeem it at any time consistent with the usufructuary nature of the mortgage in suit on payment of what was due to the mortgagee on the date of redemption. O BALBHADRA PRASAD v. DANPAT DAYAL, 9 O. & A. ——— s. 23—Immoral consideration — Money paid to husband for divorcing his wife—Custom — Burden of proof—Erroneous finding of fact—Second appeal.

A creditor, who knows that the object of his debtor in taking the loan advanced by him is to utilize the money for payment of compensation to a husband, who is willing to divorce his wife, in case his marriage expenses are paid back to him, is not disentitled from recovering it by suit from his debtor.

There is a presumption of lawfulness of every consideration; and as the law presumes against illegality, the burden of establishing illegality as a fact lies on the person who asserts it.

As the custom of reimbursing the late husband's relations for the expenses of a woman's first marriage is so well-known, in order to prove that a contract, to compensate the husband, with expenses of his marriage upon his assenting to divorce his wife, is immoral or opposed to public policy, and, therefore, unlawful, it must be established that there is no such custom of compensating the husband.

However erroneous or grossly improper a finding of fact may be, it is unassailable in second appeal, provided it is supported by proper evidence. N NARAYAN v. LAXMAN 885

An agreement by which a man binds himself to associate for the whole of his life only with a certain body of his fellow-men and to abstain completely from associating with another body is opposed to public policy and ought not to be enforced.

The defendant steamship Company undertook with the plaintiff to carry certain goods from Liverpool to Cochin and received the advance freight therefor in England. There was a provision in the bill of lading for termination of voyage in case of "restraint of rulers", and for non-liability of the Company for any loss or damage thereby. The goods were put on board one of defendant's steamers and duly arrived at Bombay Harbour but there the steamer was commandeered by the Government of India for the use of transport. In consequence all the cargo was discharged in the port and notice given to the consignee. There was some correspondence between the defendant's agents at Bombay and the plaintiff on a dispute as to who should bear the charges for transhipment between Bombay and Cochin. Finally the goods were transhipped by the defendant Company from Bombay to Cochin. The plaintiff took delivery of the goods and paid the charges. In a suit by the plaintiff against the defendant Company for refund of the sum so paid:

Held, that (1) The "restraint of rulers" being one of the excepted causes, the master of the ship was entitled, on the steamer being commandeered, to land the goods at Bombay and the ship-owner's responsibility ceased as soon as notice was given to the shippers, that even though the voyage had not been completed, the company was not bound to refund any portion of the advance freight paid or carry the goods to Cochin at their expense ;

(2) The "law of the flag" which governed the contract of the bill of lading, meant in this case the English Law, at any rate till the contract came to an end by the goods being landed in Bombay;

(3) The defendant Company having intended throughout to hold the consignee responsible for the charges from Bombay to Cochin and never having intended to act gratuitously and the plaintiff never having repudiated the Company's action in sending the goods to Cochin, the Company could not be held to have acted voluntarily or gratuitously;

(4) In any case, under section 70 of the Contract Act, the defendants, being carriers, were bound to make arrangements for the disposal of the cargo that, therefore, they must be held to have acted lawfully in sending the goods from Bombay to Cochin and that the plaintiff having enjoyed the benefit was bound to pay the charges. M CLAN LINE STEAMSHIP CO. Where lands are held in common by co-sharers each co-sharer is entitled to cultivate in his own interests in a proper and husbandlike manner any part of the lands which is not being cultivated by another of his co-sharers, but he is liable to pay to his co-sharers compensation in respect of such exclusive use of the lands. Such an exclusive use of lands held in common by a co-sharer is not an ouster of his co-sharers from their proprietary right as co-sharers in the lands. When co-sharers cannot agree as to how any lands held by them in common may be used, the remedy of any co-sharer who objects to the exclusive use by another co-sharer of lands held in common is to obtain a partition of the lands. No co-sharer can, as against his co-sharers, obtain any jote right, rights of permanent occupancy, in the lands held in common, nor can he create by letting the lands to cultivators as his tenants any right of occupancy of the lands in them.

Even if the Midnapur Company purchased any jote rights in lands, held in common by the co-sharers, such a purchase would in law be held to have been a purchase for the benefit of all co-sharers and the jote rights so purchased would by the purchase be extinguished.

In Bengal a co-sharer has no more power to confer a right of occupancy on a raiyat than a middleman would have, and in Bengal a middleman cannot obtain as a middleman a right of occupancy in himself, much less can he create in his tenant a right of occupancy in lands held by him as a middleman.

Plaintiff sued for partition of certain lands in which he and the defendant were co-sharers and for a declaration that the defendant had no jote rights in any of the lands of which he sought partition. In an earlier suit between the predecessors-in-title of the parties, the question of the defendants' right was also in issue but the then plaintiff had excluded it by the statement of his Pleader and the first Court had, therefore, expressly stated that it could not decide it. The defendant had thereupon urged in appeal that the Court was wrong in not deciding it and had asked the Appellate Court expressly to decide it and the Court had done so:

Held, that in so far as the Court decided the point raised it must be assumed to have also decided that the then defendants' objection that the point should be tried was a good one and that the issue

Court Fees Act (VII of 1870), s. 7 (iv) (a), (x) (a)—Agreement to sell immoveable property—Suit for execution and registration of sale-deed, nature of—Specific performance—Court-fee payable.

There may be a suit for specific performance of a contract without any prayer for possession.

Plaintiff agreed to purchase a shop from the defendant for a certain price. A sale-deed was executed but it was not registered and the defendant subsequently sold the shop to a third person. Plaintiff sued the defendant for the return of the sale-deed, or, in the alternative, for execution of a fresh sale-deed and, for registration of the deed,

He did not ask for possession of the shop as he alleged that he was in possession of it:

Held, that the plaintiff's cause of action was the defendant's refusal to carry out the agreement of sale, and the suit was, therefore, one for specific performance of a contract and fell within section 7 (x) (a) of the Court Fees Act, Court-fees being payable on the amount of the consideration. L FAKIR CHAND v. RAM DATT, 5 L. 75; (1924) A. Where a mere declaration is sufficient to give the plaintiff full relief a further declaration will be deemed to be redundant, and the fact that the plaintiff has asked for a redundant relief will not alter the nature and scope of the suit and convert the suit into one for a declaration and consequential relief for purposes of Court-fees.

Plaintiff obtained a personal decree against defendant No. 1. In execution of the decree plaintiff discovered that defendant's share in certain joint family property had been diminished by means of certain fictitious and collusive transactions. Plaintiff thereupon brought a suit for a declaration that those transactions were void and of no effect and asked for a further declaration that he was entitled to realise his decree from the estate of defendants Nos. 1 to 6, defendants Nos. 2 to 6 being the other members of defendant's family:

Held, (1) that the first declaration was sufficient to give full relief to the plaintiff and the prayer for the second declaration was a mere surplusage;

(2) that the suit fell within the purview of Article 17 (iii) of Schedule II to the Court Fees Act and was not a suit for a declaration with consequential relief within the meaning of section 7 (iv) (c) of the Act. Pat MAHABIR PRASAD v. SHYAM BEHARI SINGH, 3 Pat. 795 655

Though a party dissatisfied with a private award may wait till his adversary seeks to enforce it by the summary process prescribed by the Indian Arbitration Act, and then contest it by finding such objections as are allowed by the law, that remedy is not his sole remedy and does not take away the remedy open to him under the provisions of section 9, Civil Procedure Code, of bringing an action to set aside the award on the ground that no contract providing for a reference to arbitration was made or that the contract if made was not enforceable by reason of fraud or misrepresentation.

In a suit for a declaration and for an injunction by way of consequential relief the plaintiff has the right to value his claim for the purposes of Court-fees, and the value for the purposes of jurisdiction is the same.

Plaintiff brought a suit for a declaration that there was no valid and binding contract between him and the defendant for the purchase of certain goods, and, in the alternative, that the contract, if any, was void, as having been induced by fraud, and that the parties had not agreed to refer their disputes to arbitration, and for an injunction restraining the defendant from enforcing the contract or submitting disputes arising out of the alleged contract to arbitration:

Held, (1) that the suit was maintainable;

(2) that the suit fell within the purview of section 7 (iv) (e) of the Court Fees Act, and the plaintiff was entitled to value his claim for the purposes of Court-fees and pay Court-fees accordingly.

The general rule of construction of a written contract is that the language of the instrument is to be understood in its ordinary and natural meaning, but at the same time, the whole of the contract must be considered in order to ascertain the meaning of any particular part thereof.

If parties have agreed in writing to submit their differences to arbitration, the submission need not be signed.

The failure of a party to a contract to pay a sum of money claimed by the other party under the contract, constitutes a matter in difference between the parties arising out of the contract.

The filing of a suit for a declaration that the plaintiff is not bound by a submission to arbitration does not ipso facto render the arbitrators functi officio and their award void.

A submission to arbitration is not exhausted by reason of the mere fact that one award, final and complete in itself, has issued from it. There may be as many awards on one submission as there are disputes arising out of the contract. S TAYABALLY ABDUL HUSSAIN v. JAMES FINLAY AND CO. 17 S. L. R. 15; (1924) A. I. R. Where a person governed by customary law, having different wives, makes a division of the property among the members of his complex family, with the result of creating a number of single families, then the portion of property succeeded to by the children of each wife becomes a separate entity and the rules of succession to it are the rules of succession to the owner of it and not to the ancestral owner to whom prior to distribution the whole property belonged. When the smaller entity thus formed is succeeded to, the Pagwand system may still apply but it applies within the smaller family only and not within the range of the original entire family. In short, when a separate entity, created by division or partition, comes into being the full range of the succession to that entity is determined by whatever system is in fact proved to be in operation in that simple family, and it may quite well be assumed that within that simple family, the generally prevailing system of Pagwand was not abandoned. P C NABI BAKSH v. AHMAD KHAN, (1924) A. The expression 'construction' as applied to a document includes two things: First, the meaning of the words; and secondly, their legal effect. The meaning of the words is in all cases a question of fact. The effect of the words is a question of law.

Unless there is a question of the legal effect of a document which may be treated as a document of title or embodies a contract or is the foundation of a suit, a second appeal does not lie.

A second appeal is not admissible merely because some portion of the evidence is in writing of which the meaning has been mistaken by the lower Appellate Court. L DAL SINGH v. PLUIMAN, (1923) A. I. R. (L.) 626 264

J. and K., two brothers, formed a joint Hindu family. In 1868 J. mortgaged certain property belonging to the family and shortly afterwards sold the equity of redemption of the property to the mortgagee, who sold the property to the predecessor-in-interest of the defendant in 1873. Estoppel—Attestation of document, effect of—Civil Procedure Code (Act V of 1908), O. XXI, rr. 63, 103—Execution of decree—Claim proceedings—Order, finality of—Defendant, whether can question order.

Mere attestation by a person does not necessarily import knowledge of the contents of the document attested, but there may arise circumstances from which an inference may be deducible that the attesting witness was aware of the nature of the document, he or she was attesting.

The question whether attestation of a document should be held to imply assent is a question of fact and must be determined with reference to the circumstances of each case.

No actual verbal representation is necessary to give rise to an estoppel. It is quite enough that the conduct of a party leads another to act in the belief that he asserts no claim to the property. The principle on which the doctrine of estoppel rests is that it would be most inequitable and unjust to a person that if another by a representation made or conduct amounting to representation has induced him to act as he would otherwise not have done, the person who made the representation should be allowed to deny or repudiate the effect of his former statement, to

Where the summary order contemplated by O. XXI, rr. 63 and 103 of the Civil Procedure Code is not set aside in a regular suit brought within a year, it becomes conclusive and binding on all persons who were parties to it, and also on their successors-in-title, and they are thereafter precluded from asserting their rights contrary to the order, even as defendants. S AZIZALLAH KHAN v. GHULAM HUSSEIN, 17 S. Under sub-section 5 of section 63, only a witness who has himself seen a document is entitled to give evidence of it.

The words "seen it" in section 63 (5), Evidence Act, allow a person to give an oral account of the contents, when he has merely seen the document; and obviously once he has seen the document, his capacity to give the contents may result, not from what he saw, but from what he was told at the time when he saw it. The fact that the witness has seen it makes his oral account admissible. The important question whether his account is credible is a question of fact for the Trial Court.

One is from time to time compelled to imply or read into the language of an ambiguous section something which is not actually there, but as a general rule, the safest course is to hold fast to the exact language in its ordinary interpretation, if it is capable of bearing it. A MEHI LAL v. RAMJI DAS, 22 A. ——— s. 90—Deed of grant—Proof of execution—Possession of grantee for generations—Requisite authority—Burden of proof.

The application of section 90 of the Evidence Act does not justify the inference that a deed of grant which is established to be genuine was in fact executed by a person possessed of requisite authority. It is, however, not necessary for the grantee of the document or his successor-in-interest to establish by direct evidence that the executant had the requisite authority. It may, in the case of a grant which has been in operation for a long series of years, be impossible to adduce direct evidence of authority, in which case it would be open to the Court to draw an inference from all the surrounding circumstances of the case.

Where a rent-free grantee of land and his successors-in-interest, from generation to generation, have been in possession for more than seventy years, the burden is upon the landlord who sues to recover possession of the land to prove that he is entitled to do so and where no evidence is forthcoming from his side it is open to the Courts to draw the inference that the grant must have been made by persons who possessed the requisite authority. C TARAKESHWAR PAL v. CHANDRA GHOSH MANDAL, 27 C. Mere payment of rent to plaintiff by defendant not made under circumstances which would establish a relationship of landlord and tenant as between the parties would not entitle the plaintiff to a decree for rent nor would it estop the defendant from disproving the plaintiff's title.

According to English Law, if a man takes land from another as his tenant, he is estopped from denying the title of that person. But if he takes land from one person and afterwards pays rent to another believing that other to be the representative of the person from whom he took the land, he is not estopped, in a suit for rent subsequently becoming due, from proving that the person to whom he so paid rent was not the legal representative of the person from whom he took. For example, if a man pays rent to another believing him to be the heir-at-law of his deceased landlord, and afterwards discovers that he is not the heir-at-law, or that the landlord left a Will, the tenant, in a suit for subsequent arrears of rent, would not be estopped from showing that he paid the former arrears under a mistake, and that the person to whom he so paid had no title. The admission of a man's representative character by payment of rent to him is not conclusive, although it may amount to prima facie evidence. It is, like all prima facie evidence, liable to be rebutted, and the tenant is not estopped from rebutting it if he can. C ABDUL RAJJAK SIKDUR v. PROMADA SUNDARI DEVI 22

Shortly before the expiry of the time a mortgagee from one of the children paid the sum in Court to save the property. Subsequently his mortgage having been discharged, the mortgagee applied for a return of his deposit. The application was opposed by a transferee of the mortgaged property :

Held, (1) that the mortgagee had an absolute right in the protection of his own property to make the deposit and so prevent his security from becoming valueless;

Ex parte decree, suit to set aside, maintainability of—Jurisdiction of Court to entertain suit, whether can be questioned.

When a suit is brought and the Court has to make up its mind as to whether it is within its pecuniary jurisdiction, all that it can rely on is the valuation of the subject-matter which is given in the plaint.

It is open to a defendant when he appears to answer the suit, to raise the plea that the suit has not been properly valued and to show, if he can, that the Court in which the suit has been brought has no jurisdiction to try it. But if no such plea is taken by defendant when he has had the opportunity of raising it, it cannot be said that the Court has acted without jurisdiction.

A decree cannot be set aside by a separate suit brought for the purpose, except on the basis of fraud or of something akin to fraud.

Where a decree is passed ex parte against a defendant after due service of summons, a suit to set aside the decree on the ground that the suit was undervalued and the Court which passed the decree had no jurisdiction to entertain the suit, is not maintainable. A KHUDAJIATUL KUBRA v. AMINA KHATUN, 22 A. There is an undoubted presumption that forest tracts and old wastes belong to the Government unless that presumption is displaced by positive evidence that the right has, in any particular tract or piece of land, been granted by the sovereign power to any individual or bodies of individuals; or rights have been consciously allowed to grow up adversely to the Government.

A licensee cannot claim title only from possession, however long, unless it is proved that the possession was adverse to that of the licensor, to his knowledge and with his acquiscence.

In 1903 the Government officials marked off the land in suit and issued to the plaintiff as the karnavan of his Tarwad a rough patta showing the lands to which Government admitted his right to obtain a grant subject to the usual conditions. Under section 19 of the Guardians and Wards Act, a District Judge has no jurisdiction to appoint a father as the guardian of his infant son. The father is the natural guardian of the son.

The remedy of a father to obtain the custody of his infant son is by means of a regular suit and not by application under section 25 of the Guardians and Wards Act. O CHANDRA KUAR v. CHOTEY LAL, 9 O. & A. L. R. 913 330

A sanction given by the District Judge for the sale of a minor's property has no special sanctity in itself, but is open to attack on the ground not only that it was given as the result of fraud but that it was otherwise improper and did not comply with every requirement of sub-section (2) of section 31 of the Guardians and Wards Act.

A guardian applied to the District Judge for permission to sell the minor's property to pay off certain debts. The Judge thereupon passed an order simply granting permission "to sell a portion of the property to defray debts of Rs. 6,700." The sale however effected by the guardian was for Rs. 1,800 and included some debts that were not binding on the minor:

Held, that the order did not comply with the mandatory provisions of section 31 (2) of the Guardians and Wards Act and the sale was not binding on the minor. O RAMADHIN SINGH v. RAM SUMER SINGH, 10 O. & A. L. R. 420 679

Guardians and Wards Act—concld.

——— ss. 34 (c), (d), 35, 36, 45, 47—Object of Act—Power to investigate accounts filed by guardian—Court, whether can order payment of balance due—Disciplinary action, whether inconsistent with remedy by suit—Order refusing to take action—Appeal—Revision.

The Guardians and Wards Act must be construed with due regard to the object intended to be allowed by the legislation. That object is the protection of the helpless minor and the control of the guardian charged with looking after his estate.

Under section 34 (c) and (d) of the Act the Court has jurisdiction to investigate the accounts exhibited by the guardian, to amend them by striking out objectionable items and to direct the guardian to pay the balance due on a true and just account.

If the guardian fails to pay the balance found by the Court on a correct account, he becomes contumacious and can be dealt with under section 45 of the Act.

The disciplinary action taken under section 45 of the Guardians and Wards Act is not inconsistent with and does not bar the minor's remedy by suit provided by sections 35 and 36 of the Act.

An order refusing to take action under section 45 of the Guardians and Wards Act is not appealable.

Certain accounts filed by the guardian having come up for consideration the District Judge held that the amount alleged to have been spent by the guardian upon certain repairs to property was not justified and ought to be made good, but no formal order to that effect was made. Sometime after the minor again put in an application objecting to various acts of the guardian including the failure to refund the above-mentioned amount and the District Judge took the view that no action could be taken under section 45 of the Guardians and Wards Act, as the amount was not a sum in the hands of the guardian. The wards appealed to the High Court:

Held, (1) that the order was not appealable;

(2) but that the Judge had failed to exercise a jurisdiction which was vested in him and the High Court could interfere in revision. A SITA RAM v. GOBINDI, 22 A. L. J. 585; 47 A. 458; (1924) A. I. R. (A.) 593 592

Hindu Law—Adoption—Adopted son older than adoptive father, effect of.

The adoption of a boy who is older than the adoptive father is contrary to the recognised notions of Hindus as to adoptions, and to the fundamental idea of an adopted son.

But the consideration that the adopted boy should not be older than his adoptive father, cannot be treated as having the force of a prohibitive rule of Hindu Law. Such an adoption, therefore, is not invalid under the Hindu Law. B BALABAI TUKARAM BABAR v. MAHADU KRISHNA BABAR, 26 Bom. L. R. 222; 48 B. 387; (1924) A. I. R. (B.) 349 529

Where there is an initial probability that an adoption is likely to have been validly made and the conduct of the parties cognisant of the facts has been at last consistent with such an hypothesis, there is sufficient material to justify a presumption that the adoption was valid, even though direct evidence to prove that the necessary preliminaries had been performed is, owing to the lapse of time, not available.

Where an adoption has not been challenged for nearly half a century, it is permissible to presume that the Datta Homa ceremony, if it was necessary, must have been performed. A CHHOTEY LAL v. CHANDRA BHAN, (1923) A. I. R. (A.) 176; 45 A. 59 1041

In some cases decrees of Court to which a limited owner is a party may amount to alienations. The test to be applied in order to determine whether a widow's action in submitting to a decree amounted to an alienation is to see whether she materially contributed by her action to the transfer.

Hindu Law—contd.

A suit by the reversioner of a deceased Hindu for a declaration that a decree and sale in execution of it in a suit on a sham mortgage brought collusively against the widow of the deceased with her connivance are not binding on the estate after the lifetime of the widow, is governed by Art. 125 of Schedule I to Limitation Act, and limitation commences to run from the date of the decree or of the sale and not from the date of the sham mortgage, which the reversioner is not bound to get set aside.

It is not necessary according to Hindu Law that dumbness must be congenital in order to disqualify a person from sharing in the inheritance.

The principle which should govern the Court in fixing the maintenance of a Hindu widow is first to look to the mode of life of the family during her husband's lifetime and the amount fixed must be sufficient to allow the widow to live as far as may be consistently with the position of a widow in something like the same degree of comfort and with the same reasonable luxury of life as she had in her husband's lifetime, then to see what the husband's estate is and also to see how far that estate is sufficient to supply her with maintenance on this scale, without injustice to other members of the family who also have their rights to maintenance out of the estate, like hers.

A deed of settlement executed by a Hindu widow cannot be set aside at the instance of a person who has only a right of maintenance out of the estate. B BAI PRATAPGAVRI v. MULSHANKAR, 26 Bom. L. R. 269; (1924) A. I. R. (B.) 353 173 ——— Time-barred debt—Alienation of family property—Father, power of—Pious obligation of sons.

A time-barred debt can constitute a valid antecedent debt as consideration for a sale-deed given by a father of a joint Hindu family alienating joint ancestral family property.

Per Kanhaiya Lal, J.—Under the Hindu Law it is well recognised that the father has a larger power of disposal over the ancestral and joint family property than an ordinary manager, the reason being that his sons and grandsons are under a pious obligation to discharge his just and lawful debts which may have remained unpaid. Apart from the question of family necessity or common benefit, it is open to the father to pay such a debt by an alienation of the joint family property, though the debt may have become barred by limitation because what can be revived by the father and may be recovered from him by the attachment and sale of the family property, can also be recovered from his sons and grandsons, that is to say, from the joint family estate in their possession.

A promise to pay a barred-debt is in fact neither illegal nor immoral; and a son cannot escape liability merely because the debt, which his father had agreed in writing to pay, was one the payment of which he could have legally avoided.

A debt revived by the father cannot be regarded as an avyavaharik debt, or a debt not recognised by law or usage either under the old Hindu Law or under the law now in force.

A Hindu widow is competent to transfer the property, which she has received from her husband, to pay a debt due by him though it may have been barred by limitation, so as to bind the reversionary heirs of her husband.

A debt, which was barred by time and has been revived stands on the same footing as a debt which is not time-barred; and if it is enforceable against the father, it is also enforceable against his sons and grandsons provided it was not taken for an illegal or immoral purpose. An alienation made to pay such a debt is, therefore, valid and can bind the interests of the sons and grandsons of the person making the alienation. A Gajadhar v. Jagannath, 22 A. L. The separated brothers of a deceased Hindu have no locus standi to question an exchange of land belonging to the deceased effected by his widow, to which the daughter and daughter's son of the deceased have given their consent. The circumstance that the only reversioners at the time of an alienation by a Hindu widow gave their unqualified consent to it raises a very strong presumption that the alienation was supported by legal necessity. The presumption is, however, a rebuttable one.

A recital in a deed is admissible as good evidence. A DARBARI LAL v. GOBIND SARAN, 22 A. L. J. 753 31

———, gift by—Inaction by reversioner—Acquiescence—Waiver—Conduct, evidence of—Procedure.

A plea of acquiescence by inaction on the part of a reversionary heir must be very clearly made out, if it is relied on as a bar to the enforcement of his rights as such reversioner. Laches to bar a plaintiff's rights must amount to waiver, abandonment or acquiescence and to raise a presumption of any of these, evidence of the conduct must be plain and unambiguous.

Although it is not competent to a Hindu widow to make a gift of the property inherited by her from her husband and the gift is void beyond her lifetime, the interest which the donee gets cannot come to an end with the death of the donee and if the gift be in favour of a daughter the property will be stridhan in her hands so as to pass after her death to her personal heirs, subject of course to the condition that the gift must cease to be operative at the death of the donor. N NARAYAN v. TULSHI 607

A surrender of a widow's estate to be valid must be in favour of the nearest reversioner if there be only one or all the reversioners nearest in degree if there be more than one.

In the case of an invalid transfer by a Hindu widow a suit for declaration must ordinarily be brought by the reversioner nearest in succession at the time.

If the nearest reversionary heir refuses, without sufficient cause, to institute proceedings, or if he has precluded himself by his own act or conduct from suing, or has colluded with the widow, or concurred in the act alleged to be wrongful the next presumable reversioner would be entitled to sue.

In the presence of daughters and a daughter's son, even if the daughter's son be a minor, a remote reversioner is not entitled to sue. A BECHU PANDE v. DULHMA 4

The general presumption is that the income of a Hindu widow from her husband's estate is an accretion to the corpus and not her stridhanam, unless it is shown to have been dealt with by her as her own.

The bare fact that the widow had obtained a decree for arrears of rent is not proof sufficient to rebut the presumption. M PAVANI SUBBAMMA v. MUNGAMUR VENKATAKRISHNA RAO 290

——— Will, construction of—Devise in favour of daughters—Daughter having son to take absolutely.

A Hindu testator directed in his Will that his three daughters should be the owners of his property after his death. The eldest daughter being a childless widow was declared to have an interest only for her life-time. With regard to the other two daughters who were married, the Will stated that "she who has male issues is the owner of my property, that is to say, if they both have male issue then both are owners, and if one of those two has male issue then one is the owner. What I mean to say is only this that finally who has male issue is the owner of my property since after my death." A son was born to one of the two married daughters, but he died in his infancy;

Held, that the intention of the testator was that if either of the married daughters had male issue, her life-interest would mature into an absolute interest, so that the daughter to whom a son had been born took an absolute interest in the property as soon as her son was born, subject to the life-interest of her two sisters. B BAI KAMALA v. REVASHANKAR RANCHHOD, 26 Bom. It is competent to a Hindu to make a devise of an absolute estate defeasible on the happening of subsequent event. Inam—Karnam service inam—Enfranchisement, effect of—Resumption and re-grant—Distinction between service and personal inams—Prescriptive title against grantee of service inam, proof of—Madras Acts IV of 1862, IV of 1866 and VIII of 1869, operation of.

The enfranchisement of a service inam is a clear and unequivocal resumption by Government of the land and the issue of a title-deed amounts to a re-grant which creates a new title in the grantee.

The distinction between the enfranchisement of a service inam and that of a personal inam is that the latter is a mere release of the service obligation, that is a release by the Crown of its reversionary interests, while the former is a resumption of the land by Government and a re-grant of it to whomsoever Government pleases, although ordinarily the re-grant would be to the holder of the office at the time of the enfranchisement.

No one claiming adversely to an inam title-deed can succeed on a prescriptive title unless he proves either that there was no inam at all or that Government had no right left in it at the time of the resumption, that is, that his prescription was for more than sixty years at the date of the grant.

Madras Acts IV of 1832 and IV of 1866 are mere legal statements of the evidentiary value of an inam title-deed and Madras Act VIII of 1869 merely saves the existing rights of occupancy holders or kudivaramdars already on the land. M MAUTRIPRAGADA GOWRIKANTAM v. MANTIPRAGADA RAMAMURTHY, 46 M. A notice under section 17 (2) of the Income Tax Act of 1918 was issued to an assessee on 10th June 1921 in respect of the income of the year ending on 15th June 1921. Returns were received on 22nd August 1921 and 23rd March 1922 but were not accepted, and it was recorded on 31st March 1922, the last day on which the Act of 1918 was in force that notice under section 18 (2) of the Act would issue at some future time. A definite order for the issue of this notice was made on 21st April 1922 and from that day onwards proceedings were conducted under the Income Tax Act of 1922:

Held, that the Income Tax Act of 1918 and not that of 1922 was applicable to the proceedings.

Under the Income Tax Act of 1918, if an unregistered firm in which an assessee is a partner incurs a loss, his share of that loss must be deducted from his other income in ascertaining his total taxable income. N In re ARJUN KHEMJI & Co. 362

Income Tax Act (XI of 1922), ss. 3, 10 (2) (vii)—Assessment for 1922-23—Value of discarded machinery, exclusion of.

For the purposes of the income-tax assessments for the years 1921-22 and 1922-23, the petitioner Company submitted a printed copy of its audited Balance Sheet and Profit and Loss Account for the year ending 30th June 1921 that would form the basis of its final assessment for the year 1921-22 under the Income-Tax Act of 1918, and for the year 1922-23 under section 3 of the Income-Tax Act of 1922. In calculating the profits and gains for the year 1922-23, the Company claimed to deduct a certain sum under section 10 (2) (vii) of the Income-Tax Act of 1922 as representing the value of machinery which had been sold as having become obsolete

The Commissioner of Income-Tax was of opinion that the profits and gains for the year ending June 30, 1921, for the purposes of the assessment for 1922-23, should be calculated without making that allowance on the ground that that allowance had already been made in computing the income for the year ending June 30, 1921, when making an adjustment for the financial year 1921-22 of the actual income earned by the Company for that year under the provisions of Act VII of 1918:

Held, (1) that under section 3 of the Income Tax Act of 1922, the assessment for the year 1922-23 must be based on the income, profits and gains of the Company for the previous year, that is to say, the year ending 30th June 1921, and these profits etc. must be calculated according to the provisions of the Act of 1922;

(2) that, therefore, the Company was entitled to make the deduction under section 10 (2) (vii) of the Act and the fact that under the previous Income-Tax Act the profits and gains for the then current year formed the basis of the assessment for that year, was irrelevant. B In re RAJA GOKALDAS MILLS, LTD., 26 Bom. Insolvency—Composition between insolvent and creditor — Guarantor for payment—Default in payment — Adjudication annulled — Guarantor, liability of—Jurisdiction of Insolvency Court—Presidency Towns Insolvency Act (III of 1909), s. 30 (2).

A person who makes himself liable as a guarantor for the payment of a composition in insolvency, does not by so doing render himself subject to the jurisdiction of the Insolvency Court so as to be liable to be dealt with for contempt of Court, if he does not carry out any order made under such jurisdiction.

Upon the execution of a deed of composition between an insolvent and his creditors a person became guarantor for payment of the amounts which the insolvent was to pay and the adjudication was annulled. No payment, however, was made, and, on an application under section 30 (2) of the Presidency Towns Insolvency Act, by one of the creditors, the guarantor was directed to pay, and, on his failure to do so, the Court re-adjudged the debtor insolvent, and allowed time to the guarantor and insolvent to pay. No payment having been made, the order re-adjudging the debtor insolvent was, on the application of a creditor vacated, and the writ of attachment was issued against the guarantor for failure to comply with the order of payment. On appeal by the guarantor:

Held, that the order re-adjudging the debtor insolvent had the effect of putting the composition deed to an end, and of discharging the guarantor from liability thereunder. C GOVIND DAS PITY v. JARDINE SKINNER & Co., 27 C. W. N. 908; (1924) A. I. R. (C.) 176 849

In the case of an appeal filed without proper Court-fees, the Court passed an order that the appellant should deposit the required Court-fee within a fixed period, otherwise the appeal would stand dismissed. The period allowed expired during Court vacation and on the re-opening day the appellant tendered the requisite amount for the stamp to the stamp-vendor. The stamp-vendor had no stamp of the required value but promised to supply one before the Court closed for the day. The stamp, however, was not supplied on that day but on the next day when it was tendered in Court:

An appellant is entitled to exclude time spent in prosecuting with due diligence a proper application for review of judgment.

Where, however, an application for review does not state the real reason on which it is based and where it is not shown that there was reasonable ground for seeking the review, the application cannot be regarded a proper one, prosecuted with due diligence, and the mere fact that it was made, does not entitle the appellant to an extension of time under section 5 of the Limitation Act. C KAILASH CHANDRA NAG v. BEJOY CHANDRA NAG 786

The word 'judgment' in clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court means a decision which affects the merits of the question between the parties by determining some right or liability. An order refusing to extend time under section 5 of the Limitation Act for the filing of an appeal is a 'judgment' within the meaning of clause 15 of the Letters Patent of the Bombay High Court and is appealable under that clause.

The words "practice of the High Court" in the Explanation to section 5 of the Limitation Act, extend to all the habits and customs of the Court in dealing with the litigation before it. The limit of time for an appeal in the High Court is part of the practice of the Court, even though that practice may be regulated by a Statute, viz., the Limitation Act.

An application for leave to appeal to His Majesty in Council was filed a few days beyond limitation owing to the wrong advice of Mofussil lawyers whom the appellant consulted and who, in ignorance of the passing of Act XXVI of 1920, told him that the limitation for making the application was six months instead of ninety days:

Held, that there was sufficient cause for extending the period of limitation under section 5 of the Limitation Act.

Per Marten, J.—The mere fact that it is Counsel who makes a mistake does not necessarily protect his client against the consequences of his blunder, but on the other hand the fact that the mistake is one made by Counsel is not necessarily fatal to his client.

In India litigants are treated with more indulgence in the matter of time than in England.

Per Pratt, J.—A Court of Appeal should always be slow to reverse the decision of a lower Court made in the deliberate exercise of a discretion entrusted to it by law. But the rule is not absolute and the fact that there was a difference of opinion between the Judges of the lower Appellate Court is a circumstance which entitles the Appellate Court to substitute its own discretion for that of the lower Appellate Court, if it thinks it was wrongly exercised. B NAGINDAS MOTILAL v. NILAJI MORABA NAIK, 26 Bom. The mortgage was executed in 1889 and the suit would have been time-barred but by operation of section 31 of the Limitation Act, 1908, the period of limitation was extended to the 8th August 1910. In determining the nature of the claim, or finding out the Article by which it is governed, it is the nature of the cause of action rather than its form which has to be looked to and which determines the applicability of the particular Article of the Statute of Limitation.

A suit for damages sustained by the plaintiff on account of the defendant cutting plaintiff's valuable lac producing trees and removing the same is primarily a suit for compensation for "trespass upon immoveable property" and is governed by the three years' rule laid down in Articles 39 and 49 of the Limitation Act, Sch. Per Richardson, J.—Under section 55 (2) of the Transfer of Property Act, the conveyance itself imports a covenant of title in the absence of an express covenant, and a suit for refund of purchase-money where the seller is unable to pass good title, may be regarded as a suit for damages for breach of this covenant. To have an inquisition into the state of health, the state of mind, the state of property and general capacity of a person under section 38 or section 62 of the Lunacy Act, is a thing which affects that person so prejudicially that it ought not to be taken except it be first ordered upon a careful consideration of evidence.

Nothing is contained in the Act itself to direct or guide a Judge as to how he shall consider applications for an inquisition and probably no rules exist for dealing with the matter; but ordinary common sense would appear to dictate to a tribunal before whom such an application comes that care should be exercised in a painful matter of this kind, namely, an inquiry into a man's or woman's state of mind; specially in the case of people in comfortable circumstances who merely wish to lead a quiet life, care should be exercised that they are not suddenly flung without sufficient reason into an elaborate inquisition which after all is nothing more or less than a trial involving sometimes the history of a person's life back for many years, medical evidence, and all sorts of family witnesses. C MUHAMMAD MUNWAR SULTAN v. SHAMSUNNISSA BEGUM, 28 C. Where at an election held under the Election Rules framed under section 303 (2) of the Madras District Municipalities Act of 1920, the Polling Officer, when giving out the ballot papers to the voters, put on the back of the ballot papers not only the serial number but also the voter's own number on the electoral roll:

Held, (1) that the voter's number on the back of the ballot paper is a mark within the meaning of rule 17 (1) of the Rules by which the voter may be afterwards identified and the ballot papers were, therefore, invalid;

(2) that all the votes cast being invalid, no proper election had taken place.

Section 9 of the Madras District Municipalities Act is not applicable to a case where an election has taken place but has been afterwards declared void and the retiring councillor cannot, in such a case, be declared to have been re-elected. A fresh election must, therefore, be held in such a case.

Rule 17 does not require that the identification shall be made but merely that there is a possibility of such identification by reason of the mark. M SETHURAMA MUDALIAR v. MANGALA GOUNDAR, 46 M. L. J. 494; 34 M. L. T. 204; 19 L. W. 632; (1924) A. I. R. (M.) 764 401

The application of the Civil Procedure Code to election enquiries is definitely restricted in r. 6 of the Madras Municipal Elections Rules framed under section 303 (2) (b) of the Madras District Municipalities Act to the trial of suits.

An interim injunction can only be within the jurisdiction of the Judge holding an inquiry into an election petition if that injunction is for the purposes of and in furtherance of the trial which he is conducting. If a Court cannot act under section 94 and O. XXXIX of the Civil Procedure Code, section 151 of the Code does not extend its powers.

Under the Madras Municipal Election Rules framed in accordance with section 303 (2) (b) of the Madras District Municipalities Act of 1920, a Councillor whose election is impugned on account of alleged irregularities in the election is entitled to sit in Council till his election is set aside by the Judge on inquiry.

Under rule 6 of the Madras Election Rules, a District Judge inquiring into an election petition has no jurisdiction to grant an interim injunction restraining an elected candidate from taking his seat pending the disposal of the election petition.

The expression "procedure applicable to the trial of suits" in rule 6 of the Madras Election Rules does not attract the provisions of section 94 or O. XXXIX of the Code of Civil Procedure to an election inquiry under the Act, nor has the Judge any inherent power to issue an injunction. M VENKATASUBBIAH CHETTIAR v. SESHA AIYAR, 20 L. Held, (1) that the action of the Polling Officer did not per se contravene Rule 14 (1) of the Rules and did not invalidate the votes:

(2) that such act did not in any way facilitate the identification of the particular voters and consequently the provisions of Rule 17 (1) were not infringed thereby.

Where the serial number appearing in the counterfoil of the ballot papers was printed not only on the back of the ballot papers but also upon the face, although the form prescribed under the Rules distinctly stated that the numbers shall be printed only upon the back:

Malicious prosecution—Test as to who is prosecutor—Evidence recorded in criminal proceedings can be treated as evidence in civil case with consent of parties.

In a case of malicious prosecution the question is who was the prosecutor?—and the answer must depend upon the whole circumstances of the case. The mere setting of the law in motion is not the criterion: the conduct of the complainant before and after making the charge must also be taken into consideration.

The foundation of the action is malice, and malice may be shown at any time in the course of the inquiry. Therefore, though technically the prosecution may not have been instituted on the complaint of a person yet if he took a most active part in carrying it on, engaged a Pleader at his expense to assist the Prosecuting Inspector, and through this Pleader himself controlled the examination and cross-examination of the witnesses in the case, for all practical purposes he is the prosecutor.

As a general rule a record of evidence given by a witness in the previous judicial proceeding cannot be used as evidence in a subsequent judicial proceeding between the same parties, unless, the conditions which are specified in section 33 of the Indian Evidence Act exist. But when in a civil suit the parties have agreed to the admission of such evidence, the irregularity of procedure is cured.

A civil suit is a proceeding inter parties and as parties can by consent settle its final result by having a consent decree passed, there is no reason why they should not be permitted to consent to treat something as evidence of a relevant fact which it may not otherwise be: and when the Trial Judge has admitted and acted upon such evidence it is not only proper evidence but the parties ought not to be allowed to object to its admissibility in appeal.

Where the whole result of a civil case can be determined by consent of the parties, it is equally open to them to agree to treat statements as evidence which might not otherwise be so. A RADHA KISHAN v. KEDAR NATH, 22 A. L. J. 761 874

In British India, a mortgagee in possession of immoveable property under a mortgage made before the Transfer of Property Act came into force, was, under the ordinary law then in force, bound to manage it as a person with ordinary prudence would manage it if it were his own, and, unless there was an agreement to the contrary with the mortgagor, he was bound to pay out of the income of the property, the Government land revenue which might during his possession be assumed upon it, and such charges of a public nature as might accrue due in respect of the property and be payable by the person in possession of the rents and profits, and was not entitled to charge such payments against his mortgagor in the accounts.

A Muhammadan widow is a creditor of her sons to the extent of her dower-debt and her right, which is created on the date of her marriage, must have precedence over the right of a person who subsequently obtains a decree for mesne profits against the estate.

If a widow wishes to forestall other creditors and obtain what is due to her first, there is nothing fraudulent in her action in carrying such a wish out.

I, Art. 127, application of—Undivided property of Muhammadan family—Suit to recover share—"Joint family," meaning of.*

A transfer or a renunciation of a right of inheritance before it has vested is prohibited under the Muhammadan Law. Rights of inheritance only arise after the death of the person whose estate is in question. A Muhammadan cannot renounce his right of inheritance before that right has become vested by the death of the person to whom he is entitled to succeed

A bequest by a Muhammadan can only take effect to the extent of one-third of the net assets remaining after payment of his funeral expenses and debts, unless the excess is rendered valid by the consent, given after the death of the testator, of the inheritors whose rights are infringed thereby, and a bequest to a person entitled to inherit is void unless the other inheritors give their consent, after the death of the testator, to its taking effect.

A divorce pronounced by a Muhammadan in death illness or marz-ul-maut does not deprive the widow of her right of inheritance, where the husband dies during the period of her iddut.

In order to establish marz-ul-maut there must be present at least three conditions, (a) proximate danger of death, so that there is a preponderance of apprehension or khauf that at a given time death must be more probable than life, (b) some degree of subjective apprehension of death in the mind of the sick person, and (c) some external indicia, chief among which would be the inability to attend to ordinary avocations.

A too narrow a view should not be taken of the doctrine of death-illness.

Article 127 of the Schedule to the Limitation Act does not apply to a suit to recover share of undivided property of a family governed by Muhammadan Law. The words "joint family" in the Article qualify the word "property" and refer to a joint family as conceived by Hindu Law. They cannot apply to a Muhammadan family as such, where each member holds his share in severalty.

Where on the death of a Muhammadan, the only male member of the family assumes management of the estate, there being other females entitled to shares therein, the natural presumption is that he enters upon the estate as agent or manager for them, and on his own behalf. S BHAGBHARI v. KHATUN, 16 S. The extent and nature of the liability of the endorser of a note payable on demand is not governed by section 35 of the Negotiable Instruments Act. Notwithstanding the strong language of Oudh Estates Act, and in particular the enactment in section 10 that the Courts are to accept the lists framed under the Act as conclusive that the persons included in them are Talukdars or grantees, and, those of section 11; the Courts may nevertheless go behind the Act to the extent at least of recognising the trusts, and may give effect to beneficial titles distinct from the statutory title under the Act.

Section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act as well as section 14 deal with cases of transfers before the passing of the Act as also with cases after the passing of that Act.

In the case of a transfer by a Talukdar, it is the date of the transfer which counts in determining whether the transferee occupies or not the particular status assigned to him by the provisions of sections 14 and 15 of the Oudh Estates Act.

The effect of the proclamation of Lord Canning of the 15th March 1858, was to divest all landed property from the proprietors in Oudh and to transfer it and vest it in the British Government.

A proprietor in Oudh died in 1849 and was succeeded by his two sons B. and G. After confiscation of the property under Lord Canning's proclamation, the Second Summary Settlement of the estate was made with B. In 1860 he got the name of G. also entered in the Khewat in the column of Zamindar as having equal share with himself and subsequently in the same year, when enquiry was made from him by the Government as to the family custom of inheritance he declared that he and his brother were successors to the heritage in equal shares and that in future the descendants of them both would succeed according to religious ordinance and family usage. In 1867 G applied for partition but under a compromise agreed to accept an annuity. On the passing of the Oudh Estates Act, the name of B was entered in list I and list III prepared under section 8 of the Act. B died in 1871 and G succeeded to the Taluka. On the latter's death in 1919 a dispute arose between his widow and the daughter of B as to the right to succeed to the estate:

Held, (1) that at the time of the Second Summary Settlement, after confiscation of the estate under Lord Canning's Proclamation, B acquired exclusive title to the property;

(2) that, however, B by recognising the title of G as to one-half of the interest in the estate imposed a trust upon himself in favour of the latter to that extent;

(3) that this trust was discharged by the compromise under which G accepted an annuity and relinquished his right to partition;

(4) that the compromise could not be considered as a re-transfer by G. in favour of B. It was a recognition of antecedent rights and not a transfer by one brother to the other;

(5) that, therefore, on the date of the passing of the Oudh Estates Act, B was a Talukdar within the meaning of that Act without any equitable obligations attached to the estate and on his death G was his lawful successor under section 22 of the Act and on the death of the latter, his widow was entitled to succeed;

(6) that even if there was a transfer in favour of G. the result would be the same as it would be a transfer in favour of the immediate successor which would not take the estate out of the Per Dalal, J. C.—Section 15 of the Oudh Estates Act does not apply to an estate not under transfer at the time of the passing of the said Act. The word "payable" in section 48 of the Oudh Rent Act as amended by the Act of 1921 means payable under the Act which was in force at the time.

No agreement made between a landlord and tenant in contravention of the provisions of section 47 of the Oudh Rent Act, could be a valid agreement. Section 4 of the Oudh Rent (Amendment) Act of 1921 merely restricts a landlord from ejecting a tenant or enhancing his rent otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of the Act. It does not enable a landlord to claim arrears of rent under an agreement that was invalid, under section 4 of the Oudh Rent Act of 1886, and was, therefore, no agreement at all. O GUR DIN v. SIRAJUNNISSA, 10 O. & A. Pleadings—Mortgage, suit on—Plea of legal necessity, scope of—Rate of interest—Burden of proof.

A plea in general terms as to the mortgage-bond in suit being illegal and without consideration and necessity opens the defence that there was no necessity to borrow at a high rate of interest, and the question being raised the onus is on the lender to prove that the necessity included borrowing on such terms.

As in all questions of onus, a certain amount of evidence may cause the onus to shift, and evidence on the lender's part that the money could not, in the circumstances, have been raised at less interest would suffice to shift the onus so that, if the defendant led no evidence to controvert that statement, the lender would prevail. But when there is no evidence and it is evident on the face of the document that the interest charged is far in excess of commercial rates, then undoubtedly the lender has not discharged his task. P. In the absence of proof of division the legal presumption is that the normal state of every Hindu family is joint in food, worship and estate. The presumption, however, is not applicable after separation in the sense of disruption such as would put an end to a joint family.

Where there is no evidence as to nucleus it may be very readily presumed from the subsequent conduct of the parties, that the property was joint.

Where the question of inclusion of Hindu ladies is concerned, the Court has got to be exceedingly careful to come to a conclusion one way or the other, so long as it does not appear that they ceased to obtain their maintenance from the family. C KUMUDINI DASSYA v. MUKTA SUNDARI DASSYA 432

On a true construction of section 22 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, where a plaintiff institutes a suit of a character cognisable by the Small Cause Court, in the High Court, and estimates the amount or value of his claim in the plaint at a sum which is within the ambit of the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court, that section is applicable to the suit, and the plaintiff must be taken to have deliberately accepted the risk to which the provisions of that section expose him.

The test of the amount or value of the subject-matter of a suit is to be determined by the amount set forth in the plaint. But by placing a fictitious value on his claim, the plaintiff is not at liberty to determine the tribunal by which the suit is to be tried.

A suit is cognisable by a Small Cause Court if in respect both of its character and the amount or value of its subject-matter it is within the jurisdiction of the Court.

A suit claiming damages for trespass to plaintiff's land by unauthorised deposit thereon of building materials is cognisable by a Small Cause Court.

In construing a Statute, Courts of Justice should endeavour to discover the meaning to be given to it by a consideration of its terms.

A Small Cause Court is competent to make a reference to the High Court, under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act, upon an application made under section 38.

In order that a reference under section 69 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act may be in the proper form, there must be a statement of the facts of the case signed by the Judges who heard it; the point on which there is a difference of opinion must be formulated, and statements of the reasons assigned by each Judge in support of his view.

Where it can be shown that a loss sustained by the principal is directly traceable to disregard on the part of the agent of directions issued to him regarding the conduct of business, even though such disregard may have been due to nothing worse than negligence, or overconfidence in the honesty of others, such misconduct on the part of the agent is actionable.

The word 'rules' in section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act, means rules of procedure regarding appeals laid down in the Civil Procedure Code.

The meaning of section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act is that all orders made by the District Judge or District Delegate by virtue of the powers conferred upon him under the Act are subject to appeal in accordance with the rules of procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure.

Under section 86 of the Probate and Administration Act, an appeal lies to the High Court against an order passed by a District Judge granting permission to an administrator to dispose of immoveable property under section 90 of the Act.

It is not desirable to grant permission to an administrator to sell immoveable properties not in his possession to which third parties claim an absolute title, or which are subject to ostensible incumbrances, unless it is proved that other properties, not the subject of contention, are not available for sale. A partner's share in the assets of a partnership concern is "property" and is liable to attachment and sale in execution of a decree.

The definition of the word "property" is section 2, clause (d) of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 is very comprehensive and includes any property over which or over the profits of which the insolvent has a disposing power which he may exercise for his own benefit. All rights of action which relate directly to the bankrupt's property and can be turned into assets for the payment of his debts including claims in the nature of damages, except such as arise from bodily or mental suffering or personal inconvenience of the bankrupt or from injury to his person or reputation are "property" which vests in the Official Receiver.

Under section 28 of the Provincial Insolvency Act of 1920 it is the whole property of an insolvent that vests in the Receiver and not only that which can be attached and sold in execution of a decree.

The assignment of a share in the assets of a firm is not the assignment of a mere or bare right to sue but of the share of the assets of the firm with the incidental right of recovering the same by the aid of the Court. It is for the Court in each particular case to decide whether in the view of the Court the assignment in dispute is property with an incidental remedy for its recovery or whether it is a bare right to

An entry in a Record of Rights is not necessarily conclusive. It is an entry to which the presumption of correctness attaches under the provisions of section 44 of the Punjab Land Revenue Act unless and until the contrary is proved by legal evidence. If, however, the entry itself is inconclusive, or appears on the face of it to be erroneous a Court would be justified in rejecting it, and it would not be necessary in such a case to produce extraneous evidence to prove the incorrectness of the entry. The question whether the presumption of correctness attaching to an entry in the Record of Rights has been rebutted is one of fact and cannot be examined in second appeal.

A Railway Company, when entrusted to carry goods from one station to another has, under section 72 of the Railways Act the liability of a bailee, but it can contract itself out of that liability by a special contract in one of the forms recognised by Government.

Under the risk note form B the Company is held free from all responsibility for any loss, destruction or deterioration or damage to the consignment except when there is a loss of a complete consignment or one or more complete packages forming part of the consignment.

Where, therefore, all the bags belonging to any consignment arrive and none of them is missing the Company is protected by Risk Note B even though it is found that the bags had been damaged owing to the wilful neglect of the Railway Company.

The Railway Company is protected by the Risk Note B equally against a claim by the consignor and the consignee.

The position of the Railway Company as carriers protected by Risk Note B continues till the date of the delivery to the plaintiff. It is not, therefore, liable as warehouseman even if the loss is occasioned after the consignment arrives at its place of destination and before delivery to the consignee. A EAST INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY v. JANKI PRASAD, (1924) A. A C. I. F. sale is not a sale of goods, but a sale of documents relating to goods. It is not a contract that goods shall arrive, but a contract to ship goods complying with the contract of sale, to obtain, unless the contract otherwise provides, the ordinary contract of carriage to the place of destination and the ordinary contract of insurance on that voyage and to tender these documents against the payment of the contract price.

That he secures the freight for the carriage of the goods in question to their destination, has the goods covered by an insurance policy for the voyage, places the goods on board the ship proceeding to the destination mentioned in the contract, and then tenders the necessary documents to the buyer. When he has done this, he has done all that he need do to entitle him to the payment of the price at which the goods have been agreed to be purchased. The insurance of the goods is intended for the protection of the buyer and if the goods are lost in transit, it is the buyer that recovers the amount of the insurance policy. The buyer, therefore, protects himself against the loss of the goods by getting the seller to insure them as soon as they are placed on board and the property in the goods, therefore, which are appropriated to the buyer passes to him as soon as the seller puts the goods on board a ship bound for the place of destination.

Respondents Nos. 1 and 2 were both residents of and carried on business at Amritsar. Respondents No. 2 contracted to purchase certain goods from respondents No. 1 C. I. F. Karachi.

The indent contained the following clause :—

" For reimbursement we authorise you or your correspondents to draw upon us at 30 days sight with relative documents attached for payment (in case of need sellers invoice to be taken in lieu of the draft) which drafts we engage and bind ourselves to accept, on presentation and pay on maturity notwithstanding any objection we may have regarding maturity or on account of any variation whatever from the terms of the indent."

The goods arrived at Karachi and the drafts for the price together with the relative documents were despatched to the Amritsar branch of the Chartered Bank of India. Due notices were sent to respondents No. 2 to retire the drafts and make arrangements for taking delivery of the goods but they failed to do either, contending that the goods had been late shipped. Respondents No. 1 then retired the draft, and referred the disputes between them and Respondents No. 2 to the arbitration of certain arbitrators at Karachi, who made an award in their favour. Respondents No. 1 then made an application to the Court at Karachi to file the award :

Held, that the contract having been made at Amritsar, the documents of title having been tendered to respondents No. 2 at Amritsar, and the latter being bound to make the payment at Amritsar, no part of the cause of action had arisen at Karachi, and the mere fact that the goods were lying at Karachi did not give the Karachi Court jurisdiction to deal with the matter. Sir rights, though they can only be held by a proprietor, are something beyond and apart from the mere proprietary rights. The right of sir-holder is a right to exclusive possession coupled with the fact that no person cultivating under him can acquire occupancy rights. In a joint and undivided village each proprietor may have his own separate sir although the proprietary rights in the whole village are joint.

Sir rights cannot be acquired by purchase. Where the entire sir has been sold and the purchaser has obtained actual cultivatory possession, the land is treated as his khudkasht and not as his sir.

Where three out of four brothers, the joint sir-holders of a sir khata, sell their rights, they lose their sir rights by the sale and obtain instead ex-proprietary rights in a proportionate share of the holding. The 4th brother, who has not sold his rights, does not lose his sir rights in the remaining portion of that holding and if the purchaser from his brothers takes possession of that portion, he is liable to be ejected from that plot. A RAM PRASAD SINGH v. JANKI PRASAD SINGH 899

Section 31 of the Specific Relief Act entitles a party to a document, on the ground of fraud or mistake, to have the document rectified so as to bring it into accord with the real intention of the parties. Where, therefore, a blank has been left in a document, owing either to fraud or to mistake, evidence to fill the blank is admissible under proviso 1 to section 92 of the Evidence Act.

Specific Relief Act—contd.

A sale-deed contained an agreement for re-purchase in the following terms :— "Will re-sell to the vendor at his request within three years for Rs. " but the amount of the consideration was omitted. In a suit by the vendor for rectification of the deed by insertion of the amount of the consideration :

Held, (1) that the omission was due either to an oversight of both parties, which would amount to a common or "mutual" mistake, or to the action of the defendant, on whose instructions the deed was prepared in order that he might subsequently take advantage of the omission as against the plaintiff, which would amount to fraud on his part, and that, in either case, evidence was admissible to fill in the blank ;

(2) that looked at from another point of view, the deed was a mortgage by conditional sale, and the mortgagor was, under section 60 of the Transfer of Property Act, entitled to redeem the mortgage in the absence of specific agreement to the contrary, on payment of the mortgaged money, that is to say, in the present case, the amount of the original loan. R MAUNG PE GYI v. HAKIM ALLY, 2 R. 113; (1924) A. The principle of estoppel between the mortgagor and the mortgagee works in favour of and against both of them.

A mortgagee in possession is estopped from denying the title of his mortgagor during the continuance of the mortgage, just in the same way as the mortgagor is estopped from varying his own authority to mortgage the property.

Therefore, a mortgagee after he has obtained possession of the mortgaged property in pursuance to the contract of mortgage cannot claim the relief of cancellation of the mortgage under section 39 of the Specific Relief Act on the ground that his mortgagor had no authority to mortgage the property. O IBAD ASHRAF v. INAYAT ULLAH, 10 O. & A. Plaintiff, a Hindu son, brought a suit for a declaration that certain terms in a lease of agricultural land of joint family property granted by his deceased father were not binding upon him. It was objected that as the plaintiff was entitled to sue for ejectment, a mere suit for a declaration was not competent:

Held, that as a decree for ejectment of a tenant of agricultural land could not be passed by a Civil Court, a suit for a declaration was maintainable. A PHOOL SINGH v. GOBIND KOER 399

——— s. 42, proviso—Suit for office—No prayer for possession—Maintainability.

In a suit for an office the plaintiff is not bound to ask for possession of properties relating thereto.

Where the plaintiffs sued for a declaration that they were the trustees of a temple lawfully appointed by the Devastanam Committee and for a direction that defendants should be made to restore the office to them and for an injunction restraining them from interfering with the exercise of their duties as trustees:

Held, that the suit as framed was properly maintainable without a prayer for possession of the trust properties and that proviso to section 42 of the Specific Relief Act did not operate as a bar to the suit.

Per Spencer, Offg. C. J.—A trustee, claiming only a right to administer a certain trust should not be compelled to sue for physical possession of all the trust properties against defendants who claim only a similar right of management and should not be compelled to pay stamp duty calculated on the total value of the endowments of the trust.

A suit does not lie for specific performance of an agreement to lend money on mortgage.

Where a mortgagee does not pay the whole of the mortgage-money, the mortgagor cannot sue for the recovery of the balance, but he may obtain compensation or damages for breach of the contract or may redeem the mortgage on payment of the sum due.

The whole of the proceedings under Act XIX of 1841 are interlocutory depending upon the filing of an application for relief asking the Court to determine who has the right to possession pending the final determination of the rights of the parties in a regular suit.

Considering the wide powers that are now given to the Courts to make interlocutory orders in regular suits, an application for relief under Act XIX of 1841 should not now be entertained. The Act is really out of date, and there is no necessity whatever for parties claiming the estate of a deceased person to have recourse to it. The relief which is properly open to them is to file an administration suit and apply for the appointment of a Receiver, in which case the question will be, who should be given possession until the dispute between the parties has been decided in the suit. Then the Court can by an interlocutory order either appoint a Receiver and so take the property into its own possession, or it can allow any of the disputing parties to have possession on such terms as it may think fit. B MAHMADBHAI PEERBHAI v. BAI HAVABAI, 26 Bom. In a suit on a promissory note, the defendant filed a written statement denying its execution but allowed it to be decreed ex parte. A few days after the written statement was filed and before decree, the defendant executed a usufructuary mortgage of all her immoveable properties for a term of 10 years in favour of her brother's son who was not a man in well-to-do circumstances.

There was no pressure from any creditor nor was there any necessity for creating a mortgage over the entire properties for such a long period of time. No provision was made for the payment of the pro-note debt. It was, however, found that out of the consideration of Rs. 10,000 a sum of Rs. 7,000 went towards the discharge of debts due to third parties by the defendant and the recitals as to the rest of consideration were made with the object of defeating and delaying the plaintiff who had brought the suit on the pro-note:

A sub-mortgage is an assignment of the mortgage and having regard to the remedies of the sub-mortgagee, a deposit by the mortgagor of the mortgage money in Court does not contravene the provisions of section 83 of the Transfer of Property Act merely by reason of the fact that the mortgagor recites the sub-mortgage in his petition and the Court directs notice to issue to the mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee and the money, owing to disputes between the mortgagee and sub-mortgagee, is not paid out,

Transfer of Property Act—contd

The fact that the mortgagee and the sub-mortgagee have disputes inter se either as to the validity of the sub-mortgage or as to the amount due thereunder will not affect the mortgagor.

A sub-mortgagee is a necessary party to a suit for redemption.

A mortgage of moveable property which was not in existence at the time when the contract of mortgage was entered into is valid and is enforceable as against a transferee of the property with notice of the mortgage.

The method of assessing damages in case of a breach of a contract to deliver sugar-cane juice produced out of a certain area of land would be to ascertain the quantity of juice which could be produced out of the stipulated area, to ascertain the price at which it might have been fairly sold in the market during the season to which the contract related, deducting from such price the ordinary charges of producing and selling the quantity of juice in question. The amount so awarded should not, however, in any case exceed the amount of liquidated damages fixed by the parties.

Ordinarily the question as to the amount of damages to which a party is entitled is a question of fact and a finding as to the amount of damages arrived at by the first Appellate Court would be binding on the High Court in second appeal; but where the finding is an arbitrary one the High Court is entitled to interfere with it. A JUGAL KISHORE v. RAM NARAIN, (1923) A. Under sections 9 and 41 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act, it is only with the sanction of the Local Government that the Court of Wards can either assume or abandon the superintendence of any person or property. Once a notification under section 14 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act has been issued, the property of the ward is considered to be under the Court's superintendence and the mere fact that the Court does not take over the management of the property in fact cannot affect the legal character of the ward and of his property. These remain under the Court's superintendence with all the consequences arising therefrom until a further notification is published under section 46 of the Act.

There is no distinction between the proprietors disqualified under section 8 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act and proprietors whose estates are taken over on their own application under section 9 of the Act. Both classes of proprietors are brought under the common denomination of ward and labour alike under the disabilities imposed on all wards.

The words "shall be presumed" in section 15 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act cannot be construed as allowing any evidence in rebuttal.

A mortgage executed by a proprietor whose estate has been notified as under the superintendence of the Court of Wards is void ab initio notwithstanding the fact the Court has never taken over the actual management of the estate.

The failure of the Court of Wards to take over management of an estate notified to be under its superintendence had not the effect legally of removing the ward and his property from its superintendence.

Section 26 of the U. P. Court of Wards Act empowers the Court of Wards to appoint a manager for any property under its superintendence, and though normally such managers are specially qualified officers there is nothing in the Act itself to prevent the Court of Wards from allowing a ward to carry on the duties of a manager.

Section 11 of the Contract Act puts minors and persons disqualified by law from contracting, on the same footing.

There are many cases in which equity will give relief against frauds perpetrated by infants. Wherever the infant requires as a plaintiff the assistance of any Court it will be refused until he has made good his fraudulent representation. Wherever the infant is still in possession of any property which he has obtained by his fraud he will be made to restore it to its former owner. But he cannot be made to repay money which he has spent merely because he received it under a contract induced by his fraud.

Section 65 of the Contract Act starts from the basis of there being an agreement or a contract between competent parties and has no application to a case in which there never was and never could have been any contract.

Therefore where an agreement is void because the party entering into it was incapable from contracting as where the agreement is by a disqualified proprietor under the superintendence of the Court of Wards no compensation can be allowed under section 65 of the Contract Act.

A representation of a question of law cannot operate as an estoppel. A representation by a proprietor, whose estate has been notified as under the superintendence of the Court of Wards, that he is competent to transfer the estate does not operate as an estoppel. O HARI KISHUN DAS LALA v. CHOUDHRI MOHAMMAD SAFI JAN, 10 O. & A. ——— ss. 111, 112, 233 (k)—Partition, modes of initiation of—Question of title—Procedure—Jurisdiction of Civil Courts, bar to, extent of.

To oust the ordinary jurisdiction of Civil Courts by virtue of the bar created by section 233 (k) of the U. P. Land Revenue Act, it must be shown that the alleged bar is perfect and is in accordance with the provisions of the law which create that bar.

Where a Collector proceeds to enquire into a question of proprietary title raised in partition proceedings he must strictly follow the procedure laid down in the Code of Civil Procedure for the trial of original suits, and the effect which his decree will have depends upon the observance of the formalities prescribed by section 111 of the U. P. Land Revenue Act.

The partition of a khata can be initiated either by an application for partition of the khata or by an application by way of an objection in response to a call made by the proclamation contemplated by the provisions of Chapter VII of the U. P. Land Revenue Act. A partition made without either of these two conditions being complied with cannot be given the effect of operating as a bar to the determination of a question of title in a Court of Civil jurisdiction. O NAROTAM DAS v. MOHAMMAD RAZA, 9 O. & A. Vendor and purchaser—Contract for purchase of goods—Goods to bear specified numbers—Numbers not descriptive of quality—Vendor forwarding goods of required quality bearing different numbers—Purchaser, whether can refuse acceptance.

The defendants contracted to purchase from the plaintiffs some bales of long cloth of their manufacture of a particular quality and bearing certain specified numbers. The plaintiffs forwarded cloth of the required quality and description but bearing different numbers and explained that there was a clerical error in the contract and that the numbers entered in the contract should have been those marked on the goods. The defendants, however, refused acceptance of the bales and terminated the contract. Thereupon the plaintiffs sold the goods at a loss and sued them for recovery of the balance of the amount. It was found that the numbers on the cloth had nothing to do with its quality nor was the cloth sold in the market by its numbers. The fact was that the purchaser of the cloth from the manufacturers could get any numbers put upon it that he pleased, and they indicated to him the width of the pieces in each bale but when the bales passed out of his hands they became merely reference numbers:

Held, that as the numbers put on the goods did not give any warrant or indication of their quality or description, the defendants were not entitled to refuse goods bearing different numbers and were bound to make good to the plaintiffs loss caused by their breach of the contract. P C RAMJIVAN NEVATIA v. BHIKAJI AND CO., 26 Bom. Where a purchaser does not take delivery of goods ordered by him; the vendor cannot re-sell the goods on his account as the property in the goods has not passed to the purchaser. But he can claim damages the measure of which, under the ordinary rule, would be the difference between the contract rate and the market rate at the date of the breach.

In such a case as the above if the vendor claims as the measure of damages the difference in price which he realised at the re-sale of goods and the contract price, the Court can nevertheless award damages according to the correct measure even without an amendment of the plaint to that effect. B NARSINGGIRJI MANUFACTURING CO. v. BUDANSAHEB ABDULSAHEB KAJI, 26 Bom. There is no such thing as between a vendor and a purchaser as a covenant to pay money running with the land.

The predecessor of the plaintiff sold certain land to the predecessor of the defendant and contemporaneously with the sale-deed but quite independently of it, the latter executed an ekrarnama whereby he bound himself, his heirs and legal representatives, so long as the land was held by them, to pay to the vendor and his legal representatives the sum of twenty rupees per year for the sheba of a particular Thakur. The vendor subsequently sold the land to the defendant. Plaintiff sued the defendant in the Small Cause Court to recover the sum secured to him by the ekrarnama and obtained a decree. An application in revision to the High Court was dismissed. A subsequent suit for similar relief which was tried by the Munsif on the ordinary side was, however, dismissed, but was decreed by the District Judge on appeal. On second appeal by the defendant:

Held, (1) that the suit was an ordinary suit for money and was not excluded from the cognisance of a Small Cause Court by Article 4 or Article 11 of Schedule II to the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act;

(2) that, therefore, no appeal lay to the District Judge against the decision of the Munsif dismissing the suit;

(3) that a second appeal to the High Court was barred by section 102 of the Civil Procedure Code, but that it was open to the High Court to treat the memorandum of appeal as an application for revision and to set aside the decree of the District Judge as being without jurisdiction;

(4) that assuming the suit was not cognisable by a Small Cause Court, it was liable to dismissal as the agreement on which it was based did not run with the land and did not bind the defendant;

Vendor and purchaser—concld.

(5) that, in that view of the case, the previous decision of the Small Cause Court and the refusal of the High Court to entertain an application in revision against it, did not operate as res judicata, as the case was not cognisable by a Small Cause Court. C MOHINI MOHAN ROY v. ———Sale by person out of possession—Sale for consideration of costs of litigation to recover property—Champerty—Validity of sale—Vendor refusing to join as plaintiff—Suit by vendee, joining vendor as defendant, whether competent.

In India there is no law of Champerty and a transaction by which an indigent person out of possession makes over his property to some other person who is prepared to recover it by paying the costs of the litigation, though involving a claim of a speculative nature, is not invalid in law.

Where a vendor backs out of his agreement with the vendee to join with the latter as co-plaintiff in recovering possession of the subject-matter of the sale, there is no alternative for the vendee but to sue alone and implead the vendor as a defendant and the suit cannot be said to be defective on that ground. O INDARPAL SINGH v. RAMESHWAR BAKSH SINGH 285

Defendants as importers sold to plaintiffs certain goods coming out from England. The shipments were specified as from April to June of the year. Defendants failed to deliver goods of May shipment. The correspondence in regard to the shipment went on till 31st October. When the defendants withdrew their offer to deliver the goods. Plaintiff sued for damages:

Held, that under the circumstances it was not unreasonable to take the market-rate of 1st November in assessing damages for the non-delivery of the goods.

A Court has discretion under section 34 of the Civil Procedure Code to allow interest from the date of the suit to the date of the decree, but as such a course is out of the ordinary, the Court should record its reasons for awarding such interest. C PANNALAL SAGORE MULL v. MUKHRAM RADHAKISSEN, 39 C. Way, right of—Public high-way—Private pathway—Suit to enforce right—Special damage.

"By the Common Law of England, there are three distinct classes of rights of way and other similar rights. First, there are private rights, in the strict sense of the term, vested in the particular individuals or the owners of particular tenements and such rights commonly have their origin in grant or prescription. Secondly, there are rights belonging to certain classes of persons, certain portions of the public, such as the freemen of a city, the tenants of a manor or the inhabitants of a parish or village. Such rights commonly have their origin in custom. Thirdly, there are public rights in the full sense of the term, which exist for the benefit of all the King's subjects, and the source of these is ordinarily dedication."

A suit for the enforcement of a private right of way is maintainable without proof of special damage. It is only in the case of a public high-way that the question of special damage arises. C HARISH CHANDRA v. HARISH CHANDRA, (1923) A. I. R. (C.) 622; 39 C. L. J. 347 195

Will—Capacity of testator, proof of—Undue influence—Burden of proof—Succession Act (X of 1865), ss. 46, 48.

In Probate proceedings the onus of establishing the capacity of the testator lies on the propounder. If the caveator impugns the Will on the ground that it was obtained by the exercise of undue influence, [illegible] persuasion or moral coercion, it lies upon him to establish that case by legal testimony. The Court will not, in such a case, rest its decision upon mere suspicion.

A man may act foolishly or even heartlessly in making his Will, but if he acts with full comprehension of what he is doing, the Court will not interfere with the exercise of his volition. PC MOTIBAI HORMUSJEE KANGA v. JAMSETJEE HORMUSJEE KANGA, 22 A.
